Scientific experimenters in this field are not so confident. The technical problems to be overcome are the most difficult they have ever encountered Leaders in radio development are hopeful but not certain. H. P. Davis, "father of broadcasting," Lee DeForest, inventer of the radio tube. Harold A. La Fount, of the Federal Radio Commission, Ray H. Mason, president of the Institute of Radio Engineers, and several others have recently stated that it will be years before broadcast television will be commercially practical, if at all.

Today a small picture in motion can be sent by radio, or better by wire, over apparatus which costs about $00,000 at each end of the line. That is the best that has been done so far. Thousands of clever engineers are working on the problem of improving and cheapening television, but few are willing to promise anything very definate.

DIESEL—

Walter Lees and Frederick Brossy recently flew their airplane over Jacksonville Beach for 84 hours and 33 minutes without refueling. The engine that made it possible for them to stay so long in the air is the latest application to aviation of the invention of the late Rudolf Diesel. an engine which uses crude oil instead of gasoline, and ignites its fuel by the heat of compress-air and so needs no electrical ignition system.

Diesel engines today drive half of the world's ships, at a third of the operating cost of steam-engines. Building them light enough to fly with is a problem which engineers are beginning to overcome.

The new Navy Zeppelins being built at Akron will have Diesel engins. So will most of the airplanes and airships of the near future. Fifty years from now some other kind of engine may supplant theDiesels in turn.

PROGRESS—

New York was the last city in America to abandon the old-fashoned horse-drawn street-cars, the last of which ran up to a couple of years ago. But it is the first large city to abolish the steam locomotive.

All passenger trains entering New York city from any direction have been drawn by electric locomotives for several years. Steam engines are still used for hauling freight trains on the West side of Manhattan Island, this summer.

It is exactly 100 years since the first steam-drawn passenger train ran on a railroad in America. There were railroads, with horses to draw the cars, for a hundred years before that. There will still be railroads a hundred years from now, but the method of running trains may be something we of today do not dream of, any more than our great-granfathers dreamed of electric motors. Perhaps air-propellers driven by Diesel-type engines will pull the fast freight from New York to Frisco in a day on high elevated tracks in 2031. Perhaps some means of propulsion by rockets will be used. All we can be sure of is that the speed will be greater.

VERBENA SERVICE STATION IS COMING TO THE FRONT

If you are curious and wondering why the Verbena Service Station is gaining so rapidly in popularity among motorists, then you should pay a visit to that station, and have one of the employees there to show you the many advantages to be found there.

It is not the policy of this newspaper to publish article after article boosting some individual place of business, but when a place of business is making efforts to forge ahead and be a credit to a town and county, then this newspaper believes they deserve recognition.

The Verbena Service Station is constantly adding new and modern features to its already competent service. Within a few days the recently erected automobile repair department of the station will be fully completed and is now, however, open for business and keeping their mechanic busy at all times.

Sanitation is another feature of the rest rooms of the station. The barber shop, located in connection with the station is operated by an experienced barber. A visit to the Verbena Service Station and a look around will show one why it is becoming popular, not only with residents of Verbena, but with motorists from all over the state who may be passing through Verbena.

SLAVERY STILL EXISTS

It is almost incredible that there should still be 5,000,000 or more human beings existing in abject slavery in various parts of the world. Yet such is the case, according to a report of a slavery commission organized under the auspices of the League of Nations.

Slavery is found, it is said, in nearly a score of countries, and is especially prevalent in Abyssinia, China, Hedjaz and Liberia. A traveler in Abyssinia has described "slavery, open, cruel and fiendish; gangs of slaves marching in misery, the men chained together in rows, and the women and children dragging themselves along beside the main body."

There is no doubt that similar conditions exist in many other countries, although in most of them slavery is officially forbidden. In some areas the condition of actual slavery is disguised under the form of contract labor and peonage, or debt slavery, the latter also prevailing in some South American countries.

Some encouragement is seen, however, in the steps being taken by the League toward the abolishment of slavery particularly by the British government, through whose efforts about 700,000 slaves have been liberated since the close of the war

Now, as always, the suppression of "man's inhumanity to man" is one of civilization's major tasks.

Budgeting Calories

by Jane Rogers

Cheap Cuts Can Be Converted Into Tasty Main Dishes. Wise Seasoning Plays Important Part

IN budgeting household expense money—so much for fresh vegetables, so much for fruits, and on down the line of every day necessities—the thrifty homemaker frequently finds a stumbling block in the selection of meats to round out the heavy meal of the day.

Steaks, chops and the finer cuts eat heavily into a weekly allowance. They are undoubtedly delicious, and father and the growing boys who have been burning up energy during the day, need this kind of food to supply them with stamina and build up muscle.

But it is not always necessary to select the finest offering from the butcher's counter. Especially at this time, when it is necessary to make the elusive dollar stretch farther than ever before, the housewife can still satisfy an appetite demand, and at the same time offer a tasty meat dish, without cutting too heavily into the budget items set aside for food.

Cheaper cuts can be turned into delicious bits by wise seasoning and a few variations in the method of preparation. Mutton, round steak, neck, and other cuts form the basis of some of the best recipes composed by leading dietitians.

One important rule for adding to the tastiness of these cheap cuts, a rule by the way that is almost a standard in many countries, is to add a touch of sugar along with salt, pepper, sage thyme and the other seasonings. Used much as you would use salt or pepper, the sugar does not call attention to itself but nevertheless blends and "points up" the other flavors.

A careful study of almost any cookbook will offer scores of suggestions to the housewife for ways in which the cheaper cuts can be used. Where they do not the housewife can benefit by this little seasoning trick which has been used by many chefs for years.

Here is one recipe that illustrates how an inexpensive cut can be turned into an appetite-appealing main dish.

Mutton With Apples

2 pound mutton steak
3 apples
2 onions
1 tablespoon sugar salt and pepper
mint jelly

Cut the mutton into serving size pieces. Trim fat. Roll each piece in flour well seasoned with salt and pepper. Brown in a little fat in the frying pan. Arrange in baking dish. Place sliced apples and onions on top. Sprinkle with sugar, salt and pepper. Cover and bake in moderate oven for one and one-half hours. Before serving spread with mint jelly.

G. O. P. And Prosperity?

Menalcus Lankford, one of those rare birds, a Republican Congressman from Virginia, appealed over the radio the other day, to the South to come into the Republican party. The basis of his argument was two-fold. First, that it was highly advisable in the interest of democracy that there should be two strong parties everywhere in the United States, in order that merit of policies rather than sectional prejudices should influence elections. Naturally he made no reference to his ideal condition in respect to such States as Maine, Vermont and Iowa, for example. The second string to his lyre was that by joining the Republican party the Southerners would come into a happy family, one destitute of such disturbing controversies as, according to Mr. Lankford, divide the Democratic party.

The touching harmony illustrated by the revolt of a third of the Republican delegation in the Senate against the administration, to say nothing of the surreptitious efforts by Robert H. Lucas, the Executive Director of the Republican National Committee, to prevent the return of Norris as Senator from Nebraska, must have occurred to everybody who heard the appeal.

Of course, the conflict over prohibition was the particular thing at which Representative Lankford adroitly hinted. Of course, the wet East and the dry South are not in accord on this issue, but it is a curious idea that this division in sentiment is confined to the Democrats. Republican Pennsylvania and the dry Northwest, equally Republican, are as far apart on it as Democratic Massachusetts and Democratic Georgia. The New York Republicans are as vociferously wet as the Kansas Republicans are dry. The only difference between the two parties in regard to this controversy is that there is some movement among the Democrats to get an expression of opinion on the subject and to have a majority of the party fix its policy, while on the Republican side the whole strategy is to make their party appear wet in wet States and dry in dry States.

On the economic side of things, the Republicans suffer a division that has no parallel in the minority party. The farm revolt is based in a preponderant degree on the resentment of the agricultural sections of the country against the tariff policy which gives them nothing that adds to the return for their products while imposing extortionate exactions on everything they have to buy.

The only harmony observable in the G. O. P. is their hope of retaining the government and their fear that they cannot do it with Mr. Hoover as their candidate in the face of the explosion of the issue based on the hypothesis that prosperity and a Republican administration always go hand in hand.

Curtis As A Barometer

Politically, no less than in his governmental habit of mind, President Hoover appears to be beset by doubts and plagued by indecision.

Commentators on politics have been devoting a good deal of their attention to the question of who will be Mr. Hoover's running mate in 1932. Of course, the choice will be made entirely in accordance with Mr. Hoover's desires, as nearly as the Republican Convention is able to ascertain them or to gratify them. In such an election as that of next year reluctance on the part of high calibre men to take the second place on the Republican ticket will be a factor. Indeed, the dubiousness of the prospects of the Republican ticket next year is equally an element in Mr. Hoover's uncertainty and the statements attributed to Vice President Curtis that his mind is not made up yet as to whether he cares to be a candidate for a second term in the highly ornamental office he now occupies.

Should Mr. Curtis run again, and should the ticket be defeated, he would be left entirely out in the cold, an appalling fate for a gentleman who for forty-six years has occupied public office. He took no risk of this sort when he ran with Mr. Hoover in 1928, for he was still United States Senator and, if that election had been lost he would have gone on being a Senator until 1933. It is doubtful if the Vice Presidency is not just as attractive to him now as it was when he was Senator and the presumption is inevitable that, if he thought the Republican national prospects were promising, he would be glad to continue where he is. The alternative he is represented as considering is to again run for the Senatorship from Kansas, on the theory that the prospects are better there. Even Kansas is no longer a certainty, for a Democrat now occupies the seat Mr. Curtis vacated the day before he was inaugurated as Vice President. However, it is probably true that Mr. Curtis would have a better chance of election as Senator from Kansas than Mr. Hoover has for re-election as President. When as cold-nosed a politician as our Vice President is revolving in his own mind such a question as this, few people will doubt that his decision will be based on the consideration of which course is best for Charles Curtis. Moreover, the significance of his dilemma must be apparent to everybody inclined to place faith in an expert's prophecy of a political trend. The circumstances that Mr. Curtis is weighing the question is in itself definite evidence that even in the heart of this stalwart Republican there is not much hope of the G. O. P. winning the next Presidential election. Should he definitely decide to go after the Senatorship again, the country generally will interpret it as a confession that he has abandoned hope for a Hoover second term.

The Farmers Hardware, as usual, is catering to the desire of the people. Now they have gone and placed some nice new benches on the sidewalk for folks to sit on during these hot summer afternoons. It is not so comfortable there in the mornings, but in the afternoons, when the sun has started its descent, then it is fine in the shade. Now if the Farmers Hardware will just put some cushions on the benches, and serve lemonade in the afternoon, we'd say they were going fine, and I'd be there every afternoon. So if you are looking for somebody and can't find them, they may be at the Farmers Hardware corner.

We have to thank John Temple Graves II, eminent columnist of the Birmingham Age-Herald for the following, which is pretty good:

If you haven't made your will and are weighted down with Hoover prosperity, you may find some suggestions worth following in the will said to have been left recently by a certain merchant. "My overdraft at the bank," it recited, "will go to my wife—she can explain it to them. My equity in my automobile I want to go to my son. He will then have to go to work to keep up the payments. Give my good will to the supply houses. They took some awful chances on me, and are entitled to something. My equipment give to the junk man; he has had his eye on it for several years. And I want six of my creditors for pallbearers. They have carried me so long they might as well finish the job."

Not bad, John Temple, and by the way, after you get hitched up, as I read by the papers that you are going to be soon, and I congratulate the lucky young lady, and extend congratulations to you also. I've been wondering if maybe you wouldn't change the title of your Age-Herald column to "Last Night" instead of "This Morning." Another suggestion that might strike you as worth considering, is to change it to "The Morning After," which after all, would be "This Morning," wouldn't it? Anyway, the column is okeh with me, and I like it. Hope you are the same.

And I say, John C. Page, I was in Maplesville the other day, and a fellow remarked to my ever-hearing ears, "That fellow John Page, over in Clanton is one hustler, ain't he?" Well, I told him you was, and you are, ain't you?

Now, I got to say something about this friend of mine, Henry T. Pipes, the railroad man who has to let the Pan-American by every morning. He done me a favor the other day, and don't know it, I don't suppose. But I'm much obliged, anyway, and thanks too. Next time you go fishing and catch a big fish, I'm gonna try to get the ed to put your picture in the paper.

* * * *

Some of these days I'm gonna get my picture in the papers, but I got to figure out something to do to get it there. I never have done anything to amount to much, but I'll do something some of these days, and maybe the ed will recognize me.

I kind of feel all summerfied about something. Maybe it's the weather. Then along comes Bob Sumner, Senior and M. Lande, talking about a real golf course for Clanton. That kind of hits me right, but I can't play golf now, but I bet I could learn if Lande would teach me.

And another thing. I ain't so hot when it comes to swimming, either. So I've just about decided that I'm gonna apply for swimming lessons, as I understand there is a fair young lady round town who might be giving swimming lessons this summer, and I believe I would be a good pupil, if I didn't start to wanting to take my lessons at night, under the spell o' the moon.

Now here goes our ladies off to Pensacola for the convention of the Pilot Club. Boy, howdy, ain't Clanton going some these days. We were represented in Miami at the Kiwanis Club Convention, and Mrs. Lande, Alma Allen, Dewey Branch, and Mrs. Stapp, are going to carry the Clanton colors in Pensacola. Maybe I should say, have carried the colors, because they ought to be back in Clanton right away. They been down there since Sunday, and I'm kind o' getting lonesome without them. I wondered if maybe they needed a chauffeur or valet, or something that I could go along and do. Maybe fix punctures, or something.

And there Mr. and Mrs. Dief, and little Diefs, been wandering away off up yonder through Tennessee, Kentucky, and round about in Ohio. Dief came back safe and sound this week, but Mrs. Dief and Helen, and Milton are still looking around in the state of Ohio. Saw where Dief drove over five hundred miles in one day. Ain't that traveling some, when I start out, I get about fifty miles a day, but there's a reason for that. I see too many things I always have to stop and look at, on the way.

Peaches, pecans, pomegranates, pears, apples, figs, squashes, beans, watermelons, peanuts, grapes, cantaloupes, chickens, eggs and gosh knows what all, I saw down at Joseph B. Atkinson's house the other day. Strolling through his yards, front and back, is like walking through a miniature modern farm, with the variety of things raised there. And there's flowers too, but I'll give Mrs. J. B. credit for those pretty flowers in the beds out front. If there ever was a complete, happy home, they got it, and off comes my top-piece to them.

Been seeing Hoke Pipes round town during the past several days. He used to be one of the boys in Clanton, and although his hair is kind o' thin on top, now, he is still one of the boys here, and we are mighty glad to see him back here on a viist. And he brought Mrs. Hoke, and three little Pipes with him, al lthe way from up in Pennsylvania to visit his folks here, Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Pipes and Claudy Pipes. Some of these days, Hoke, I'm gonna trickle off up in your neck o' the woods, and sit awhile with you.

Editor Chilton County News:

I wish to say to the people of Chilton County that I visited the almshouse of Mobile County and was greatly pleased with their manner of its administration being under the supervision of an employer. This I have advocated I believing would be its plan for our almshouse in Chilton County, for I have several petitions asking our commissioners to place our almshouse on that plan. My petition reads as follows:

We, the undersigned citizens and tax payers of Chilton county, respectfully petition your honorable court to place our almshouse in charge of a suitable employee under your direct supervision, governed by such rules and regulations as will best serve their welfare. After being advised to get the plan how Mobile was run, I withheld my petition but I have a letter from Judge William of Mobile saying that I shall have the information.

Yours respectfully,

LINDQUIST ON THE BIBLE

—o—

Thorsby, Ala., June 20, 1931.

Editor News,
Clanton, Ala..
Dear Sir:

Having today read an epistle of one Mr. Jones, father of a preacher, printed in Chilton County News, and I hope you will give the same favor in printing my Opus:

In the first place, there are very few real Christians, preachers included; but plenty of dogmatists, of the different beliefs and denominations.

Second, no preacher of any denomination would hold the pulpit five weeks if he preached the doctrine of Christ. Christ taught self respect and manhood to the slaves and free laborers and small farmers, or for the multitude practically revolt against the Pharisees and Sadducees, and priests and in part against the publicans, or the Roman tax gatherers, who were generally hated by all. Jesus had only one Pharisee among his eighty-four disciples and that yellow dog betrayed Him. The priests and scribes, lawyers and plutocrats held meetings to take Him away. But they did not dare to touch Him in day time, so they got Judas Iscariot, the traitor, to show them where Jesus was located at night, when the followers were sleeping. The recognition sign was a kiss. Further, his father, mother, brethren and His cousin, John the Baptist, and all His disciples were Essenees, and the New Testament does not mention them at all, but anyone who has read history, etc., can see their plans and rules. In most every verse of the gospels and epistles of his brothers, James and Jude, and disciple John, Christ's plan was called "The Way."

Further, I challenge any priest or preacher, or others to show by the New Testament that Jesus of Nazareth, the Christ, that He stated He was the son of God. He said "The son of man," before Caiphas. He, Jesus, said "You said it." And before Pilatus, He said, "They say so." His disciples said: He was the Christ, the One to come. Further, at the Passover feast, there were Jews from Greece and the Islands, and from the Tiber to the Nile, Euphrates and the Tigris, and they wanted Him to come and preach to them, and so He intended. But the priests, Pharisees, Sadducees and lawyers and the rich money-changers and plutocrats held a secret meeting with St. Annas to take Him away before the end of the feast, as if He get off. He will overthrow the system of the whole world, (so they got Him away.)

If Jesus had got out among the Diaspora Jews and Gentiles to preach the way we would have a different world today; and a very different New Testament, nearly opposite to the paulinism we got.

Jesus preached respect, character, will and power to the slaves and laborers and small farmers. Believe what you see and have faith on what you can not see, or can understand at present. He taught knowledge will come. He, Jesus, preached to the slaves, laborers and farmers to stand up for their rights and principles. In one thing Jesus was strict: abide by your agreements and contracts. But He practically preached rebellion against Roman robbers and plunderers, and their agents, not as Paul: meekness, humbleness, obeyance, etc.

Third, in all time past, and to present day, 99 preacher in every hundred or more, have always been against the common people's will and rights and always preached meekness (like Paul) and humble to every tyrant, and even murderers who murdered their slaves by the thousands a day, and blessed and prayed for war, and upheld tyranny, whether among gamblers or slavedrivers or tyrannical governments.

And few preachers preach the sermon on the Mount or Matthew X or VI Chapters, or James Epistle and neither preachers or churchgoers live after same. They act more like a tiger against a lion, and either devour a lamb.

I am an agnostic, but no atheist or infidel against Jesus of Nazareth. I have listened in several churches, but go to none regularly, because in no church so far have I heard Jesus taught, but cant and church dogmas. But I don't blame the preachers, because if they did not follow their rules and dogmas they would be out in short order, like Bishop Montgomery Brown of the Presbyterians. He preached and wrote facts of Christ and his brother Bishops kicked him out of church.

I have read three pamphlets of Rutherford, but never heard a radio or other speech from him, or any other of the Bible students. I hold that C. T. Russel and Judge Rutherford's teachings are nearer correct than any other, at least, it is not as dogmatic as others as far as I know.

I do not swallow all their views, and on certain points I think Rutherford is wrong, and wrote him so, but he said he had no time to answer letters.

Rutherford says: "When breath leaves the body, persons are dead and know nothing." I differ there. I hold that when breath leaves the body, the carcass is dead, but breath of life of the person are more just and correct then, within 20 miles of earth's surface, and alive. But while breath and mind are in carcass, good and evil thoughts can exist during the same minute, but after hic! Pooh!. good and evil can not congregate and as the majority of the thoughts have been, the same company life require. No life of any kind has since the deluge passed through the ether of 260 degrees Centigrade below zero. Before the deluge, when earth and ether were warmer when the poles were tropical, it was possible for spirit bodies to transfer.

Fourth: I say when Rome invested Palestine by Pompey, a high priest opened the gates of Jerusalem and let the Romans in, a traitor to his class and all Jews. And at the Judean Insurrection 79 A. D. the priests, lackeys, or errand boys, opened several gates to let Titus in. Taking Jerusalem then had been hard for Romans, but priests, Pharisees, Sadducees, and the rich, on one side, common people, multitudes on the other, were fighting among themselves, and the treacherous priests let the Romans in on their Jewish citizens. But Jesus's testimony came true.

I hold, and others, too: That any farmer who farms the soil, and any laborer who goes to church regular, is a traitor to his class.

Yours respectfully,
J. A. LINDQUIST.

CHAPTER XXI

The units of the Twenty-sixth division, Maj. Gen. Clarence Edwards commanding, began to arrive the latter part of September, continued during October and the early part of November, and were now assembled in the billeting area near Neufchateau. I inspected the division November 1, 1917, and found the various organizations presented a very creditable appearance. The officers seemed alert and military and the personnel looked strong and vigorous. Their instruction had been carried out under the direction of Brigadier General Traub, one of the brigade commanders, and seemed to be well advanced.

Doughboys in the Trenches in Winter Time.

Taken as a whole, the apparently slow progress of our preparation in Europe also caused considerable adverse comment, if not dismay, among the allies. Inquiries were made directly by the military and civil officials as to why we did not move more rapidly, to which the reply was always, "lack of shipping."

New British Offensive.

Immobilized by the mud of Flanders, where British attacks had continued intermittently from the end of July to the middle of November, with rather excessive losses, the British commander in chief turned to a more southerly portion of his line for the final offensive of the year. Choosing the Cambrai front on which to launch the effort, careful preparations, including the concentration of an unusual number of tanks, were made to insure a break through the enemy's defenses. The tanks and the infantry were to make an opening through which the cavalry was to pass and attack the flanks of the enemy. Then French troops held in readiness in the vicinity were to follow. As to the question of command of these combined forces when both should become engaged it was to be left to the senior general officer in the vicinity, who might be either French or British. In going over these plans it seemed to me that their idea of securing co-operation after the French should begin participation was rather vague.

During the day we first went to visit General Byng, commanding the third army, who explained further details of the attack and the progress already made. He and his chief of staff were busy receiving news from the front and felt that all was going well.

British Victory Spurs Allies.

The attack was made on a six-mile front and the British had the advantage from the outset. The sudden debouchment of the long line of tanks, closely followed by the infantry, all without the usual warning of long preliminary artillery bombardment, completely surprised the Germans. The tanks broke wide gaps in the wire and subdued the machine-gun nests, aiding the infantry through the defenses with a minimum of loss.

The front was rather narrow, considering the depth of the objectives. A maximum gain of some four and a half miles was secured the first day, and a greater result was prevented, it was said, by a serious check to the tanks at Flesquieres.

For some reason or other the French were not called into action, but presumably it was because the British cavalry, which was to precede them, could not go forward as planned. The offensive continued for two or three days longer with varying success. It was, however, a decided victory, and, while not as great as the British expected, it gave encouragement to the allies on the western front and no doubt helped to offset temporarily the depressing effect of the serious defeat recently sustained by the Italian army.

CHAPTER XXII

An American mission headed by Col. E. M. House arrived in France toward the end of November for an interallied conference. Other members of the mission were Admiral W. S. Benson; Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, chief of staff, Oscar T. Crosby, for the Treasury department; Vance McCormick, chairman of the war trade board; Bainbridge Colby, shipping board; Alonzo E. Taylor, Thomas N. Perkins, war industries, and Paul Cravath.

As the representatives of different nationalities gathered in Paris recent reports of decreasing losses of ocean tonnage and greater destruction of German submarines, with prospects of still further improvement, seemed to give more of hopefulness in the general situation and allied spirits were somewhat revived.

The British had won at Cambrai and were making satisfactory progress in their advance on Jerusalem, which, it was said, would be facilitated by the use of their new base at Jaffa. The Italians seemed to have recovered their morale to a limited extent, with the stiffening of their lines by British and French divisions, and had successfully held their own against the Austrian attack on the Piave.

Not the least hopeful thing was the step just taken toward unity of command in the creation of the supreme war council. But the decisive factor in the whole situation, if it could be utilized in time, was the tremendous economical and physical power of the United States. To make that available before it was too late was the problem upon the solution of which depended the success of the allied cause. Would the allies see it and would they work together to solve it?

Interallied Conference.

When all were seated around the table in the assembly room at the ministry of foreign affairs Prime Minister Clemenceau, who presided, spoke briefly, setting forth the importance of the gathering and the necessity of translating the noble spirit of the alliance into action. No attempts at oratory were in evidence, nor was there prolonged discourse on any subject. Naturally questions concerning available man power, shipping, munitions and supplies were mentioned, but only in a general way. The conference did little more than agree that the study of the various subjects should be left to committees composed of interallied representatives.

It was very clear that everybody was looking to America to provide the additional man power needed to give the allies superiority. None was more eager to increase our forces than ourselves, but on my part every possible argument to procure shipping had been presented to the allies and to our War department, so when the conference urged the expedition of our forces it made the strongest kind of a case in favor of immediate increase of allied aid in tonnage.

For some time reliance upon the allies for any considerable amount of tonnage had seemed almost in vain, and it looked as though we should have to depend upon our own limited resources for most of it. The British were giving some assistance in the transportation of men. American ships had carried up to November 1, 67,218 and the British 54,751.

Our Engineers in Fight.

The results of the British success at Cambrai were not to be permanent, as the Germans quickly retaliated. General von Marwitz hastily assembled a force of some fifteen divisions, and November 30 suddenly launched a violent counterattack. The British were short of reserves, and before Von Marwitz was stopped his troops had regained most of the lost ground.

It was in this operation that a detachment of our Eleventh regiment of engineers became engaged while serving with the British. The men, to the number of 280, were at work in the Gauzacourt railway yard when the Germans attacked. One officer and nine men were wounded, and the detachment withdrew. They were then given arms and fought with the British.

War Council Meets Again.

The second conference of the supreme war council was held at Versailles December 1. Our representatives, political and military, at this meeting were Mr. House and General Bliss, respectively. At the opening session M. Clemenceau drew attention to the general situation, referring especially to the collapse of Russia, the probable release of enemy troops from that front, the adverse situation in Italy, the depletion of allied man power, and the reliance of the allies on American assistance.

The premier enjoined the military representatives "to bear in mind that their function is to advise the supreme war council as a whole and not merely as representatives of their respective nations on the council, and that they should view the problems confronting them not from a national standpoint but from that of the allies as a whole."

The military representatives at this conference were instructed to examine the military situation and report their recommendations as to the future plan of operations; to study the immediate situation in Italy from the offensive as well as from the defensive point of view, and to report on the utilization of the Belgian army.

It was evident that this body was to become a kind of superparliament not only for the discussion of resources, aims and purposes, but for the determination of policies looking to concert of action in support of the military efforts. The spirit in which the problems were approached at this meeting made it clear that the supreme war council would sensibly promote co-operation among the powers.

The second meeting of the interallied conference December 3 closed its sessions. None of the questions brought before the first session could be settled, but they were taken up by the more permanent body, the supreme war council, which, as time went on, undertook to co-ordinate the work of the various committees that had been forced to handle the problems involved.

CHAPTER XXIII

A large party, including Col. E. M. House, the American delegates to the interallied conference, Ambassador William G. Sharp and Lord Northcliffe, went by special train from Paris December 4, 1917, to our training area, stopping at my Chaumont headquarters en route.

On the train I had an interesting conversation with Lord Northcliffe of the British air board regarding the formation of an American army and its transportation overseas. Lord Northcliffe thought his government should do more to help with shipping, but, like most Englishmen, he believed it best for us to send our men for service with the British. He argued in favor of a proposal that Lloyd George had recently made to Mr. House, that we should incorporate in their units any infantry that we might not be able to organize immediately into complete divisions of our own.

"It is all very well," I said, "to make such an appeal to us, but it is impossible to ignore our national viewpoint. The people themselves would not approve, even though the President and his advisers should lean that way. We cannot permit our men to serve under another flag except in an extreme emergency, and then only temporarily."

I also insisted that we would contribute more largely to allied success by the use of the American army as a unit.

Hits Fault Finders.

About this time Mr. House told me that Petain had criticized the American ideas of training and also that Louis Loucheur, minister of munitions, had spoken about the rise in prices caused by American purchases. Mr. House wisely suggested to these gentlemen, he said, that matters of this kind were for me to settle.

I called without delay on M. Clemenceau and told him of the reports and explained my understanding about training agreements with Petain and also the steps that had previously been taken by the purchasing board, in co-operation with his own bureaus, to prevent the rise in prices. I also told him that French dealers were largely to blame if prices had risen, as we had eliminated competition among ourselves and that our purchases were and had been for some time actually handled through French officials.

I objected to these back-door methods of lodging complaints and emphasized the necessity of frankness and directness in all our dealings. I asked him to give instructions that if there was any fault to find with our methods it should be brought to my personal attention. He entirely agreed with me and expressed chagrin and surprise that any other course had been followed. On the face of it there was no other conclusion, however, than that both complaints were made for the purpose of finding out just the extent of my independent authority.

IN MEMORY OF LEON JONES

The one who was so dear to our hearts has gone.
The voice we loved is stilled.
The place made vacant in his home and ours can never more be filled.
Oh, thy sweet voice is hushed, thy warm true heart is still.
And on thy bright and happy face is resting death's cold chill.
Oh, dear, the hope. The hope is so sweet
That in Heaven we soon shall meet.
There was an angel band in heaven that was not quite complete.
So God called our dear sweet brother, husband and son, to fill the vacant seat.
Through all sorrow in life he'd smile—a smile of heavenly birth,
And when the angels called him home he smiled farewell to earth.
Sweet be thy silent slumber;
You no more our sorrow and trouble know.
We miss you from your home and ours dear, we miss you from your place.
A shadow o'er our life is cast—we miss the sweet sunshine of that happy face.
We miss your kind and laboring hand, thy true and sweetest care.
Oh, Dear, our home is dark and lonely without you. We miss you everywhere.

—A Sister that loves him, (Ena) Mrs. W. T. Patterson.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT JAMES E. BARRETT

To the Worshipful Master, Warden and Brethren of Verbena Lodge, No. 754, A. F. and A. M.

Dear Brthren:

With bowed heads and hearts of sadness, we again acknowledge the work and wisdom of the Supreme Grand Master in removing from our midst by death our beloved brother, James E. Barrett, who departed this life on the 7th day of June, 1931.

Brother Barrett was born in Coosa County, Alabama on the 6th day of March, 1884. He was reared, educated and married in the county of his birth.

He joined the Baptist church in Coosa County at the age of twenty-one years, and remained an active, consistent member of this branch of the Christian church until his death.

He was united in marriage with Miss Maud Hatchett in Coosa County on the 22nd day of November, 1905. To this union were born eight children. He is survived by his wife and the following six children, Bertha, Ralph, Clyde, Evelyn, Josephine, and James, Jr. He moved to Verbena, Chilton County, Alabama in 1920, where he lived until his death.

He was made a Mason at Proctor Lodge, No. 571 in Coosa County in 1920, and transferred his membership to Verbena Lodge No. 754 on the 5th day of June, 1922.

Brother Barrett was a man of strong convictions and fearless in defense of what he conceived to be right. He was kind, generous, and interested in every move for the upbuilding of his community. He was a worthy and valuable friend and a kind and loving husband and father.

NOW, THEREFORE:—As God in His all-wise providence has seen fit to call our most worthy and beloved brother from his labors on earth to that Lodge Triumphant, be it resolved:

First, that in the death of Brother Barrett, this lodge has lost a faithful and loyal member and this community a worthy and valuable citizen.

Second, that our heart-felt sympathy is hereby extended his bereaved family and friends, and though his face we see no more, we shall ever cherish his memory.

Third, that a blank page in our record be inscribed to his memory and that these resolutions be spread upon our minutes and a copy thereof furnished his family under the seal of this lodge and that a copy be published in the Chilton County papers.

Most humbly submitted,

—J. C. Patillo, Q. C. Meroney, J. S. Hubbard, Committee.

JUDSON'S NEW PRESIDENT —DR. L. G. CLEVERDON

By Hugh Mallory, Chairman

It again becomes my happy privilege to present to the people of Alabama a new President of Judson College, Dr. L. G. Cleverdon, who goes into office on July 1st, succeeding Dr. Harry Clark who resigned to accept the position of Superintendent of City Schools in his old home at Knoxville, Tenn.

It is a happy and fortunate thing for Judson and the Educational interests of Alabama that we have Dr. Cleverdon to follow in the footsteps and carry on the great work which Dr. Clark has inaugurated.

Dr. Cleverdon is a man of genial and gracious personality and appearance, of unexcelled scholarly attainment, of brilliant mind, and a platform speaker whose charm and eloquence grips and holds the attention of young and old alike.

While he has not been in Alabama for a number of years, still we find pride in the fact that he was born and reared in this State, and because of his pride in and love for Alabama he has declined flattering offers elsewhere in order that he might return and cast his lot with the people of his home State.

He is thirty-six years old, and to the vigor, the dash and the charm of youth is added a wisdom that has come to him by reason of his years of experience as a college executive and teacher and as a leader in the various departments of our young people's work. He knows the problems of the young and because of this knowledge and of his sympathetic and understanding heart, he is especially attractive to those of college age, and I predict that no man has ever come into the educational field of Alabama who has exercised a greater influence or had a stronger hold upon the love and confidence of the student life with which they have come in contact that will Dr. Cleverdon, and I also predict for Judson under his administration a greater student body and a more outstanding position in the educational life of Alabama than she has ever known in the past.

Dr. Cleverdon has a charming family, consisting of his gracious wife and three children, who will add much to the College life of Judson.

I believe that Judson today has a stronger grip upon the hearts of the people of this State, of all denominations, than she has ever had before. They have come to realize that Judson offers a superior service in education and in character building to the end that parents and students alike are turning to her in ever increasing numbers.

I bespeak for Dr. Cleverdon the undivided support of our people and the hearty co-operation of the Educational and Christian forces throughout Alabama and the South.

MORAL ECHOES

D. W. Haskew

After closing a revival at Centerville last Sunday night I decided that I would ride to my home in Clanton. At ten oclock I was at Calera, and in fifty minutes more I was at my garage door. The distance traveled was 24 miles. During that time and distance I met 51 cars going north. I rode along and wondered where the cars had been and where they were going. Not many of them carried preachers from meetings, or memebers from church services. I venture that only one car was on the road at that hour of the night returning from church services. Doubtless many of them were returning from a day of fishing, picnicing, or visiting. God has given us our cars and we ride them away from His worship. Do you think that we can justify the presence of 125 cars per hour on our paved highway in the midnight hours of the Sabbath day?

Early Monday morning I took my seat at my desk to look over the mail of the past week. I rapidly ran through the columns of the two dailies that come to me. When I had completed my brain was in a twirl. I saw large headlines about wrecks, shootings, drinking parties, robberies, bootlegger arrests, fist fights, cuttings, drownings, kidnappings, rapings, and many other blood curdling stories. Have you ever tried to scan the news of a week at one sitting? If you think that the world is having a nice quiet, peaceable time of it, you should take in the doings of the world at one time. The news of today carries us through one prolonged tragedy. Sometimes I feel like screaming at the world in language like this-"Take your blood from before my eyes, and just let me see the blooming flowers for a season!!

Not long since I was in a bed room of a certain home. On the wall of that room I saw the picture of a young lady, so clad as not to produce thoughts of purity. True, the picture was on a card to which was attached a calender, but that did not keep it from making an impression on the mind. This room happened to be the room of the son in the home. That boy stood a poor chance to be what he should be with a picture like that greeting him in the morning, at noon and at night. Many a life has been altered from the impression of a picture that hangs on the wall. A large per cent of character elements slip into the soul by the way of the eye. Parents can not be too careful in the selection of pictures that are to hang on the wall of the bed room. Fling all vulgar pictures from the wall like you would fling a rattle snake from the bed room of your darling child.

One day last week I went into the sick room with a roctor to visit a patient who was very ill. The man was near fifty years of age. Ten days before he came down upon his sick bed, he lost his desire for water He would plow all day in the burning sun and never take a sip of water. He complained that it tasted badly, and he could not stand it. His body burned out, and his organs ceased to function. When the doctor was called, the poor man was filled with poison, his tongue was swolen and he was sleeping himself towards death. The doctor got busy, and in three days the man was out of danger. Just as that man lost his desire for water, so many people have lost their desire for the worship of God on the Sabbath day. They complain about the preachers, about the churches and about the weather, and they lose their thirst for the finer things of life. They live on in the ways of the world and their souls burn out. Unless the Great Physician is speedily called, there will be no hopes. I heard the doctor say to the wife of this sick man, "Even if he does object to drinking water, you pour it down him anyway." You had better get yourself right back with the church and right with your God, even if you do not desire it. Eternal life is at stake.

On entering a home, the lady of the house apologized to me for the looks of her hands. She said that she had been canning berries, and the stain from the berries had gotten on her hands. That stain had changed the color of her hands to a dark color, and the good woman was really ashamed that they should be seen. In this case the color of the thing handled, had clung to the hands, and berries and hands looked alike. No man can dip his finger into the ink well and lift it out without ink stain upon it. As your hand will become stained in the handling of berries, as your finger will become stained when you deal with the dark things of life. Look within and see if your soul is not stained by the things that you are handling in life. People who have stained souls are always ready to apologize for their faults.

PLENTY OF PEACHES ARE IN SIGHT THIS YEAR

Plenty of peaches are in sight for Alabama and the entire country this year.

F. W. Gist, agricultural statistician for the State and Federal Departments of Agriculture reports that on June 1 the peach crop for Alabama, was forecast at 1,292,000 bushels this year. "There is another good peach crop in the State, the condition being 77 compared with the same figures last year and an average of 65," he said.

According to statistics released by the United States Department of Agriculture there will be an abundant peach crop in most all sections of the country

A crop of 78,000,000 was indicated by June 1 conditions This would be a 46 per cent increase over last years short crop," the Department said

Almost 19,000,000 bushels are credited to the 10 Southern States, compared with 10,000,000 bushels in 1930. Most of the Western States, except California and Oregon, will likely have many more peaches than last season. New York expects a lighter crop than in 1930, but most of the other Eastern and Central States will have greatly increased production of this fruit. Illinois and Arkansas look for heavy crops, compared with practically no peaches in 1930.

Record Potato Crop Produced

Alabama farmers this year shipped the largest Irish potato crop and the second largest strawberry crop produced in the State within the last decade.

This was announced by Seth P. Storrs, commissioner of Agriculture and Industries, who said that 4,500 cars of potatoes have been shipped from the State this season, compared with 2,709 cars last season or an annual average of 1,980 cars during the past 10 years. The previous record moved from the State was in 1928 when 3,131 cars were shipped. This year's movements surpasses the previous record by over 1,200 cars.

Commissioner Storrs released figures showing that the record strawberry movement from Alabama was in 1929 when the farmers of the State moved 1,354 cars. This year's shipments amount to 1,138 cars which compared with an annual average during the past 10 years of 687.3 cars

Statistics compiled by the Department of Agriculture show that over 7,200 cars of potatoes, cabbage, strawberries and cucumbers have been shipped from the State this season and

THE DESTRUCTIVE RAT

Of all the pests which infest the world, the rat is undeniably one of the worst. So great has the menace of rats become that an international association for their extermination has been organized.

Not only do rats destroy millions of dollars worth of farm products every year, but they are a menace to health through the fleas which infest them and spread diseases of various kinds, such as bubonic plague, trichinosis and hydrophobia.

It is said that one couple of gray rats will produce 800 to 900 offspring in a year, as the young become adults in four months. If all were able to find food and shelter it can readily be seen that they would ultimately overrun a community.

The program recommended for combatting rats includes the building of rat-proof structures, the cutting off of their food supply and the poisoning of those which survive other preventive measures.

Senate Vote Recount Still Shows Results

completed recounting ballots from 1,155 boxes in 36 counties, with a total of 130,656 votes. These boxes on the official returns gave Bankhead 76,749 and Heflin 53,707, while the recount gives Bankhead 70,875 and Heflin 40,891, a temporary reduction of 6,874 for Bankhead and 4,616 for Heflin. Thus far, Bankhead has been losing temporarily through ballots set aside for future decision at the rate of 7.65 per cent of the vote cast for him, while Heflin has been losing at the rate of 8.56 per cent.

The 11,490 ballots which have been laid aside temporarily for future decision are from various classes, principally those where the name of the voter was not found on the certified list sent the election officers. Practically all of these will be restored to the respective columns when explanations are forthcoming, such as a voter casting his ballot in a precinct to which he has moved after having registered in another precinct.

The possibility exists that the votes of two probate judges have been rejected temporarily by agents of the subcommittee, J. A. Carnley voted in box one of beat 17 in Coffee County. His name did not appear on the list of qualified voters of that box and the ballot has been temporarily rejected for that reason. There in another J. A. Carnley registered in beat six of Cofteee County. Whether the one rejected temporarily is the ballot of Probate Judge Carnley of Coffee County, who was a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor last August is not known in Washington. The ballot cast by Cage Head in box one of beat one in Shelby County was laid aside temporarily for the same reason by the Senate subcommittee. There is a C. Head on the qualified list of beat four in that county who did not vote in that beat. Whether the temporarily rejected ballot is that of Probate Judge Head of Shelby County likewise is not known here.

While something more than 11,000 ballots have been set aside for future decision thus far, the fact does not connote fraud either way. In recounting more than 130,000 ballots, the official figures of the returns have not been changed by as much as 100; that is, there have been ballots in the boxes supporting the official returns, a tribute to the accuracy of the men and women consisting the force of election officers which served in Alabama last November. The 11,000 rejects, however, do constitute a serious problem for the Hastings subcommittee. The question arises, who is going to pass on these 11,000 ballots? This is one of the problems that the subcommittee will seek to work out when it meets as soon as Senator Hastings can get it together.

Thus far, the subcommittee has recounted ballots in five of the counties that were carried by former Senator Heflin on the face of official returns. Due to temporary rejections, Bankhead made a net gain on the recount of 17 votes in Shelby County, 29 votes in St. Clair County; 15 votes in Chilton County; seven votes in Coosa County; 44 votes in Clay County, and 15 votes in Escambia County. In Escambia, the recount contains only 22 of the 29 boxes, as seven boxes have been retained there by a court order owing to a local contest over Commissioner. In Chilton County, where Bankhead gained on the recount temporarily, the machinery is in the hands of the Republicans. In Cullman County, also a Republican-controlled county, which, however, was carried by Bankhead on the face of original returns, Bankhead gained seven votes temporarily on the recount.

The figures throughout indicate the fairness of the election, but nevertheless a drive continues to surround the contest with an atmosphere injurious to the Democratic party of Alabama and to the State itself.

Commissioners Court Reports on Almshouse

criticism whatever of the almshouse or its keeper, but stated in substance that the same was being managed as well as could be under the circumstances. . . ."

"In conclusion the Commissioners Court wishes to state that the county has sufficient funds in the Treasury with which to make any improvements or furnish necessities for the inmates of the Almshouse, but the Court believes that these people are being as well cared for as the average citizen of the county and they do not think it necessary and wise to expend the people's money further than this and that the Commissioners Court is directly responsible for the management of the Almshouse and that if any citizen knows of any complaint now or in the future, that they will please file the same with the Court and they may rest assured that the court will investigate the matter thoroughly and make every change that the Court might deem proper under the circumstances."

Such is the substance of the report as issued by the Commissioners Court regarding the controversy about the almshouse.

In a statement given out Monday at the same time the above conclusion of the court was released, Judge Reynolds stated that the Commissioners Court has passed an order requiring that no inmate may leave the almshouse to go to other places for any length of time without securing a permit from the keeper. This order, Judge Reynolds said, is according to law and the suggestion of Dr. Andrews, state prison inspector.

The order further provides that in case the application for permission to go away is denied the inmate by the keeper, the inmate may apply to the Probate Judge or the Commissioners Court.

MUCH DAMAGE DONE IN COUNTY BY WIND, RAIN

Lightning Destroys A Barn, Crops Damaged South Of Clanton Monday

Clanton and surrounding territory within a radius of about seven miles received a heavy blow Monday afternoon from a sudden burst of wind, rain, hail and lightning. according to reports coming into the News office Monday afternoon and Tuesday.

The wind and rain started in Clanton about one-thirty o'clock and continued for some time, rain falling in torrents, accompanied by a heavy wind and sharp cracks of lightning.

The barn belonging to W. Y. Keel, over near the Enterprise community was struck by lightning and caught fire, burning to the ground, a total loss of all feed stuff and farm equipment in it. No livestock was lost, according to Mr. Keel, who was in Clanton Tuesday. He stated that they were unable to save anything from the barn.

Down in the same section of the county, perhaps a little nearer to Clanton, crops were reported as having been badly damaged by hail and wind. Fonza Vinson, Ocie DeVaughn and Joe Lansford reported that their crops were all but ruined. Mr. DeVaughn reported that his corn and cotton was beat to the ground by the hail and wind, and almost a total loss.

Clanton, Verbena, Thorsby and several other places were without electrical power all the afternoon Monday and up to about eight o'clock Monday night. The local office of the power company reported that five large poles were blown down out east of Clanton during the heavy wind, and two poles down south of Clanton.

These poles carried the high tension wires, carrying the current direct to the transformers in Clanton for distribution. Leonard Williams, manager of the local office of the Alabama Power Company, stated that he did not believe lightning struck the poles, but

Largest Winter Cover Crop in History of Chilton County Expected to be Planted this Fall

County Agent Stapp states that in 1925 less than a thousand pounds of vetch and Austrian pea seed were sown in Chilton County for soil building purposes. In 1927 about 9 thousand lbs. of vetch and peas were planted; in 1928 plantings increased to about twenty thousand pounds; in 1929 a carload of forty thousand pounds was planted in the county. In 1930 the plantings were about the same as in 1929.

The value of these crops based on increased yields is estimated to be more than $44,000. Due to the fact that a large number of farmers over the county have seen the value of these crops. and too, since the price of seed will be cheaper this year than ever known, County Agent Stapp believes that an unusually large acreage will be planted this year. The price of seed declined some last year, but indications are now that they are going to be cheap enough this time that they will be within reach of every farmer in the county.

FARMERS BEING URGED TO PLANT VETCH AND PEAS

Contest on for Club Boys In County with Cash Prizes To Be Offered

"Plant vetch and Austrian winter peas," is to be the slogan of the hundreds of progressive farmers over Chilton County this year, according to the outline of a program, from the office of the County Agent

Merchants, banks and other business men in the county are lending their wholehearted cooperation in the move to plant more vetch and Austrian winter peas in the county for fertilizing purposes. County Agent Stapp stated that by planting winter cover crops as outlined in the program, the cost of fertilizer on the same field next year will see a tremenodus cut, and thereby save the farmers of the county many dollars in production cost.

"Let the land give you your fertilizer, and make it work for you," one farmer was heard to say recently, on the idea of planting vetch and Austrian winter peas as winter cover crops.

Contest For Club Boys

County Agent Stapp stated Tuesday that he was offering a fifteen dollar cash prize to the 4-H Club in Chilton County that scores highest in the vetch and Austrian pea planting campaign, and an additional five dollar prize to the individual member of a club who scores highest. The individual members reporting to their club secretary.

The basis of scoring in this campaign is as follows: 50 points for each sale of seed, and fifty points for each 100 pounds of seed sold. That means that fifty points will be given each club or individual club member for sales turned in for seed and fifty points for each 100 pound order for seed.

This contest for the 4-H clubs of the county is open now, and will close on August 15th this year. Awards will be made at the close of the planting season, which will be somewhere around October 10th or 15th. Any additional information desired by anyone in regard to this can be had on application at the office of the County Agent.

Chilton Represented In Jacksonville

Jacksonville, Ala., June 27.—Chilton County is well represented in the summer school of the Jacksonville State Teachers College. According to the college records ten people are pursuing courses this summer toward the completion of the two year course or the four year course leading to the B. S. degree. Indications are that the Chilton County teachers will soon compare favorably in preparation with other counties in the state. The following people from Chilton County are enrolled in the State Teachers College.

Claudia Eiland, U. B. Curlee, Marjorine Henley, Olene Mims, Mrs. J. S. McNeill, Ethel Genry, Isabel Messer, Carl J. Glasscock, Claudia Smith, Willie M. Littlejohn.

MAKE THIS ANOTHER SAFE AND SANE FOURTH

A plea that may be timeworn, yet worthy of the breath used to utter it, worthy of the ink used to print it. Clanton and Chilton County has been fortunate, much more fortunate than other places so far as casualties, accidents as the result of carelessness on someone's part during celebrations on July 4th. Last July 4th, with hundreds of people gathered in Clanton, hundreds of automobiles crowding the streets, not one accident was reported here.

With July 4th, 1931, coming on Saturday, a day taken as a holiday almost every week by many, will no doubt become more of a holiday and a day of celebration than ever this year. There are perhaps hundreds of "Don'ts" that could be said, and possibly as many "Dos" in a plea to be careful, but it is not necessary to give that list. The mere words of "Better to be safe than sorry" should be sufficient.

Statistics show that 50,900 persons were killed in automobile accidents, during eighteen recent months, the same length of time that 50,510 American soldiers were killed in action and died of wounds in the World War. A bit of carelessness on someone's part could cause the death or serious injury of a person, or several persons. Be careful, consider the other fellow, show a bit of courtesy.

Automobile accidents do not cause all the deaths, so in everything one does, swimming, boating, and other recreations, give some thought to safety, and let's make this another safe and sane Fourth of July for Clanton and Chilton County.

Austrian Winter Peas

OR

Hairy Vetch

FROM SEPTEMBER 1ST TO OCTOBER 15TH
"THEY MAKE NITROGEN WHILE YOU SLEEP"

For detailed information see or write C. E. Stapp, County Agent, Clanton, Alabama

Seed cost less than at any time in history of the crop in Alabama. Alabama farmers have planted peas and vetch:

Year	Amt. Lbs.	Year	Amt. Lbs.
1918	1,535	1924	505,905
1919	2,465	1925	526,905
1921	35,508	1927	790,649
		1928	1,127,096
1922	142,455	1929	1,956,884
1923	315,765	1930	1,955,224

A year's average over the whole State of Alabama showed increased yield after peas and vetch of 22 bushels of corn per acre, and 356 pounds of seed cotton per acre. This accounts for the above increased plantings from 1918 to 1930.

ALABAMA IS PRODUCING A LARGE HONEY CROP

Alabama is this year producing the best honey crop produced in the State within the past five years according to Thomas Atchison, Apiary inspector for the Department of Agriculture and Industries, who reports prospects for a 5,500,000 pound honey crop in the State this year.

Not only are beekeepers producing a large honey crop but they are at present shipping over 200,000 queen bees to northern states and Canada, Mr. Atchison said. "Most of these queens are used for requeening and improving colonies of the north."

Mr. Atchison also reported that beekeepers have just completed shipping about 22,000 two and three pound packages of bees to northern states and Canada to make new colonies, strengthen old colonies and to pollenize fruit orchards.

"Practically all of the honey produced in Alabama is consumed in the State and several cars are shipped into the State each year. This being true farmers can well afford to increase the honey production on their farms," he said.

CAUSES OF CRIME

In their efforts to find an explanation for the increasing prevalence of crime, many thoughtful persons have concluded that the tendency to burden the public with a multiplicity of laws may account for much of the lawlessness which now prevails.

Speaking before an international convention of police chiefs, Dr. Carlton Simon said: "We can limit and harass human freedom to such an extent that even the normally balanced individual feels that he is oppressed and will seek unlawful means of expressing his personality."

Through the operation of innumerable laws and the activities of government agencies employed thereunder we are restricted, inspected, spied upon, investigated and caused many unnecessary annoyances which are resented by a people who love freedom.

If more attention were paid to apprehending and punishing real criminals, while allowing greater freedom from harassment to respectable citizens, we should doubtless have a more law-abiding and happier citizenship.

CUPID'S POOR SHOTS

Judging from the increasing prevalence of divorce and its attending evils, Cupid is doing some rather poor shooting these days. His darts have either failed to hit the mark, or having hit it failed to stick.

Convincing proof of this is seen in a statement from Detroit, where it is declared that not only are divorces reaching a high total, but alimony is assuming large proportions in the matrimonial picture. In that city it is said that no less than 11,000 divorced husbands are under orders to pay alimony and 4,000 of them are prosecuted every year for failure to do so.

The number of recalcitrant husbands confined in the Detroit house of correction for failing to pay alimony has run as high as 125 and at the time of the last report it was 116. Furthermore, it was stated that alimony payers in the city were increasing at the rate of about 70 a week.

Truly, Cupid is making a mess of things nowadays.

WHY HE WENT CRAZY

This story, with various modifications, has been doing duty for a good while, but for the benefit of those who have not chanced to run across it we tell it again.

It concerns an inmate of a lunatic asylum, who on being asked by a visitor how he got that way, replied:

"It all started when I married a widow with a grown-up daughter. Then my father, being a widower, married the daughter. That made my step-daughter my step-mother, and my father became my step-son; my wife also becoming the mother-in-law of her father-in-law.

"Then my step-mother had a son, who was my brother, being my father's son; but as the boy was the grandson of my wife, he was also my grandson.

"Then my wife and I had a son. My father's wife is my son's half-sister and also his grandmother. Now, it is easy to see that my father became my step-son by marrying my step-daughter. Therefore, being my father's father, I am my own grandfather—"

The visitor stopped the lunatic at this point, thoroughly satisfied as to why he went crazy.

DON'T GET UNDER AN OAK WHEN LIGHTNING

Kent, O., June 29.—To seek shelter under an oak tree during a thunder storm is almost as dangerous as to search for gasoline with a lighted match. Of all trees, the oak is most susceptible to lightning.

So says a bulletin issued by the Davey Institute of Tree Surgery, which has been studying the phenomena of lightning in relation to trees.

If you must get under a tree, says the Davey Institute, find a beech, for it is rarely ever the victim of lightning. The ratio of the oak to the beech in being struck by an electrical bolt is 60 to 1, according to observations made over a period of years.

The roots of a tree tap the electrical field of the ground. When a storm cloud is overhead the positive electricity in it is attracted by the negative electricity in the earth, and lightning follows.

Trees, such as the oak, which have a large root area naturally have larger electrical fields than others. Oaks also have "tap" roots, which go far into the ground and bring up large quantities of water to the tree, which serves as another attraction for electrical bolts.

The best advice of the Davey Institute is to avoid trees altogether when lightning is at work, as it would be somewhat difficult for the layman to make a scientific selection in time of emergency. Better to keep in the open spaces, if no house is near, and get thoroughly wet than to offer yourself as a target for lightning.

MOTORISTS PRAISE CONVENIENCES AT VERBENA SERVICE STATION

Recent Improvements Bring Service Station Up Into Ranks Of Best

CHAS. GULLEDGE

Verbena, Alabama can now boast of what can really be termed a complete one-stop service station for automobiles, as anyone would conclude after stopping at the Verbena Service Station of which Chas. Gulledge is operator.

The Verbena Service Station is now five years old, having been opened on a small scale in 1926, when Mr. Gulledge foresaw a regular haven for motorists on the Birmingham-Montgomery highway at Verbena, a town known for its hospitable citizens.

At the start this station was only a filling station, with two or three gasoline pumps, cold drinks, etc. Now, the Verbena Service Station shows up as a complete station where motorists, whether men or women may stop for a complete service.

Among the many services to be found there is included of course, gasoline, oil, water and free air service. But in connection there is a modernly equipped repair department which has recently been completed. This department adjoins the original building of the station, and Mr. Gulledge stated that it is equipped to do any kind of repair work to any make of car. An experienced mechanic, Harry Walker, who has been connected with large repair shops in Birmingham, is with the Verbena Service Station, and has charge of the new repair department, which was built at considerable expense. But Mr. Gulledge says his station must be complete in every way regardless.

Another item the Verbena Service Station should be commended on is its comfort rooms for ladies and gentlemen. These rest rooms have been classed with the most sanitary rest rooms along any highway, and Mr. Gulledge invites inspection of these comfort rooms. Cleanliness is predominate, and Mr. Gulledge tells one that cleanliness and comfort come first in the comfort rooms of his station. The ladies rest room is equipped with sani-gard protection. There are also rest rooms for colored motorists at the Verbena Service Station, a service seldom found anywhere. This addition has only recently been installed and is situated at one end of the repair department, with concrete floors and sidewalks.

Speaking of concrete, the Verbena Service Station has just recently received an addition of several hundred dollars worth of paving in front of the entire station, reaching from the paved highway to all corners of the station, adding much to the looks of the station, as well as adding to its convenience.

In connection with the many services, there is also a neat barber shop, operated by Ernest Bonnett, an experienced barber, and who is also a thorough believer in service plus cleanliness.

On the inside of the Verbena Service Station, one will find a complete stock of groceries, candies, cold drinks, fruits, automobile accessories, tires and tubes. In this issue there will be found a full page ad from the Verbena Service Station on Mansfield tires, and something concerning why they have selected that tire to supply motorists at their station. Also on the inside of the station will be found Miss Daisy Whitworth, who has charge of that section of this one-stop service station, and able assistant to Mr. Gulledge.

The word "Service" seems to be evrywhere at this station. When an automobile stops there, the driver may rest assured of getting prompt service. Aside from the careful study of Mr. Gulledge, there is Hugh Champion, who takes care of the customers under the filling station, with the help of several assistants.

Mr. Gulledge has gone to considerable expense in making his place of business one of the most popular service station on the Birmingham-Montgomery highway, but his faith in the future of Verbena is well founded and will justify his work in aiding to show the people who pass that way, that Verbena is still that place where hospitality reigns supreme.

This station is also a distributing point for feed stuffs for the Farm Bureau of this county.

Be Glad You Live In A Modern Town

We overheard a citizen of the town complaining recently about the cost of our modern improvements, the schools, the water system. the pavement and sewer and lights.

He spoke of them as an expense.

This is not true. Modern improvements are not an expense. They are the insurance against the decadence of our town..

This party we doubt not, has all of his property insured against loss by fire.

By the same reasoning, if he has no fire, his insurance premium is a loss. He has paid it out and received nothing in return that he could see or touch.

Modern improvements are the small town's insurance against their loss of population to the larger neighboring towns

Without them the small town would become a less desirable place in which to live and people who desire modern improvements and facilities would not continue to live in a town that did not provide them.

Modern improvements cost money, but they are the insurance that the smal ltown must pay if it is to keep up these days with the competition afforded by her larger neighbors.

Don't complain about the cost of improvements. Rather be glad that the leadership of the town is such that it goes out and contends for the things that make a community a better and more desirable place in which to live.

A Daughter's Training

Among the replies received in response to a request for a brief plan for training a daughter, a magazine received the following from a successful mother:

Teach your daughter to value a man, not wealth, looks or family, but by his character and what he himself has done.

Discourage her in looking upon men as suitors until she is at least 18.

Give her an education and keep her employed part of the time during vacation.

Make her home pleasant, so that she will not be anxious to leave it for an inferior one.

Encourage her to attend church, Sunday school, club meetings and other places where the right kind of people may be met, urging her to be particularly careful in choosing her girl associates.

These are all excellent suggestions, even though they do not always secure the desired results, and the mother who follows them will have done about all that it is possible to do for her daughter.

A Promising Program

All sorts of people are putting forth all sorts of schemes designed to prevent a recurrence of the industrial depressions such as we have been going through. Most of the schemes are merely schemes, put forward by people who do not really know what they are talking about. There seems, however, to be real promise in the suggestion of the National Civic Federation to call a national congress of selected delegates from every line of industry and business, and from the ranks of all the important trades as well, to create a permanent organization to maintain the proper balance between production, distribution and consumption.

The suggestion originated with Matthew Woll, vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, in a letter to James W. Gerard, former Ambassador to Germany, who is chairman of the Commission of Industrial Inquiry of the National Civic Federation. Elihu Root, America's most distinguished "elder statesman," is the honorary chairman of the Federation.

Under such auspices, any movement for public welfare starts off with a fair chance of success. Every intelligent person knows that all that is needed to keep business and industry on an even keel, and labor steadily employed, is co-operation to that end between all of the elements involved. Capital alone cannot do it, management alone cannot do it, labor cannot bring it about. But if all the groups of these three elements of business and industrial life get together and agree on a program, it is pretty likely to be a program which stands a chance of success. Its value will be increased if the farmers are also included. And it will be lessened in precisely the degree in which politicians take part in it.

The advocates of this movement are referring to it as "the Ten-Year Plan." They figure it will take ten years of experiment, trial and error to arrive at a working basis which will be reasonably certain of accomplishing its purpose. If some method could be devised to compel all of the interests involved to live up to their joint agreements there is no reason in the world why something of this sort should not be effective. And, as the gentlemen who are active in promoting the 10-year plan point out, unless intelligent action in this direction is taken, the alternative will be the government stepping in and regulating business, socializing industry in ways which are entirely foreign to the American conception of individual rights and liberties.

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

"Laugh and the world laughs with you. Weep and your eyes get red."

It is a great, difficult job to try to write when flies are swarming around you, lighting most unexpectedly on every part of your anatomy, excepting some parts. The darn little things are just about to run me batty right now. And one of the most aggravating things I know of is one blamed little fly, flitting around a table where a meal is being served. That one fly is more conspicuous than an elephant would be sitting at the head of the table.

If you wonder why I started off writing about flies, well, it's easily explained. They are the peskiest things I know of with one exception, and that is a flat automobile tire on the road in July about one o'clock in the afternoon.

Rambled off down to Verbena not so long ago, and edged around the yard of the home of Mrs. Lila Shepard. There she has rebuilt some of the olden times places at that stately old house, and by the latter part of this month, I'll bet that place will be a place of beauty. The scenery is also rather impressive. Aside from being beautifully shaded, and with flowers, bird houses, a spring, tennis court, and lots of other things, there is the Misses Shepard—Lila Jane and the Little Miss Shepard, who add much to the scenery to make it attractive to an old bachelor like myself. (Use your own judgment).

All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy. That is truly true. Why even I've found that some of our most successful business men get out now and then and play around a bit. But, drat it all, I never can seem to find time to get out and give a little time to things that I like. And even if I did, I'm afraid I wouldn't know how to play, being out of practice so long. I just kind of have to get my play by jumps and leaps, provided I don't jump or leap too far like some folks I know of have done.

Hello, Scottie, way down there in Dothan. Yes, I'll call you Scottie in this column, because maybe I can get away with it—for the time being. The next time you are in Clanton, you better look me up. I want you to know that I appreciate the kindness shown me the other day when we were at the same place at the same time, etc. But don't worry, or become alarmed, you will be Mrs. Frasier to me next time I see you.

Heard a criticism on this column the other day. No, it did not come in a round about way, but was made to me personally. The person said she didn't like this column back some weeks ago when I was telling of some of my experiences among some "400's" I've run into. You see readily, L. C., that I changed the subject in this column pronto, and I think I'm gonna be right over to see you shortly, if not sooner. Thanks for the letter.

I went right ahead and let S. A. Jones get all married up to a pretty girl, and didn't say a word about it. There ain't much I can say, now that he has married the girl I thought a lot of, but I will congratulate them both.

* * * *

Well, readers, it won't be so long now until I'll be picking another Who's Who in Clanton, and now that I have had my eyes opened about some things, you can expect the next selections to come of people of several walks of life, and there is a possibility that my next Who's Who will include many more places than those formerly named, and boy how I'm gonna pick the ladies.

* * * *

Hear that the Kiwanians of Clanton went on a big blow-out the other night down at Mitchell Dam and took a boat ride. I bet that was a fine outing, because when these Kiwanians round this town pull anything, they pull one.

Recent figures given out show that there are more women in Alabama than men—just about 27,000 more, I believe were the figures. Now I might call Dooker Pooker's attention to this matter, in case he hasn't already been advised. I think I'll take the census of Clanton to determine whether there are more men or more women here. In case there should be more women, then I'm sure that I will have to do something about that. There is a possibility that the static so bothersome on the radios at times round town, is due to the talking of the women, and that ought to be looked into, and maybe placed before the Legislature.

There is one advantage to the fact that there are more women than men in Alabama. And that is that us men have a wider variety to select from, whereas the women can't be too choicy about it, and too, it gives some of us men a chance to have at least two of the necessary evils, without cramping anybody's style. But at the same time, us men had better stick together on this matter, for fear there might be an uprising among the fairer sex, and we may fall before the attack.

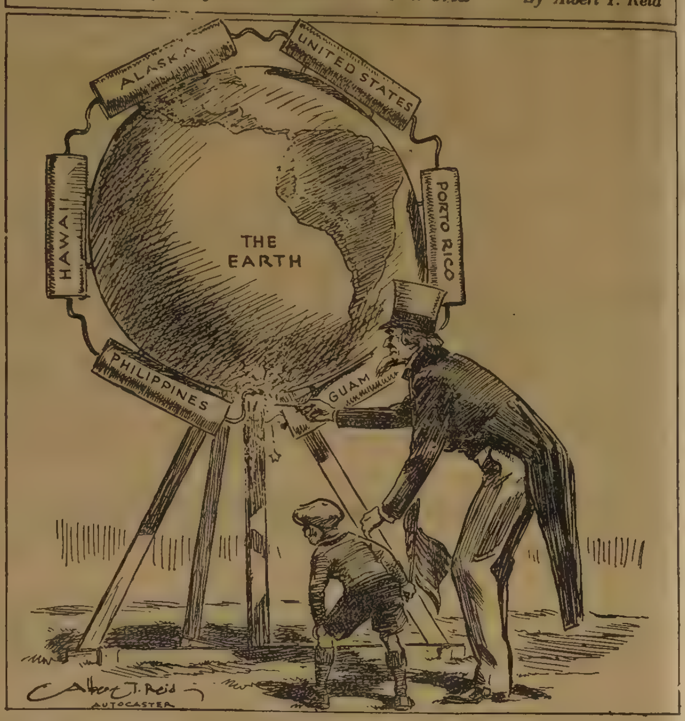
Alabama Writers Come Forth

We read poems, books, childrens stories, and very seldom stop to think of the person who wrote either of them. How many people know that Alabama has some of the most distinguished writers in the United States, and some of the most talented? The Alabama Writers Conclave which holds forth for a three-day meeting once each year, met at Alabama College at Montevallo last week for its ninth annual meeting.

It was a pleasure to the editor to be able to attend the recent Conclave, and there found that although the majority of the people of Alabama know little or nothing of the Writers Conclave, it is moving forward and doing some splendid work under the leadership of Alabama women who are striving for the better things in the literary field.

Our Fourth of July Goes 'Round the World— - By Albert T. Reid



THREE UNITED STATES PRESIDENTS DIED ON JULY 4TH

One historic fact relating to July 4 is seldom remembered in our usual observance of Independence Day, we are informed by the Division of Information and Publication of the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission. This is especially strange because this historic fact has touching and dramatic meaning. July 4 is the day on which three Presidents of the United States died. Each of these three early Presidents played a prominent part in the very formation of our government, and each received, as a reward from the people, elevation to their highest office. Having performed great labors in planning the theory of our government, it fell to their lot to set noble examples in putting the theory into practical effect.

These three Presidents were John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, and James Monroe. Indeed John Adams and Thomas Jefferson died almost at the same hour on July fourth, 1826. After many sharp differences of opinion, which had divided them during a part of their lives, Adams and Jefferson became not only reconciled but closely attached friends. The correspondence of their final years is one of the glories of American letters. Adams lived to be ninety, Jefferson eighty-three. Neither knew how close to death was the other, and Adams's last words, when conscious that death was near, are said to have been, "Thomas Jefferson still lives." But Thomas Jefferson was already dead.

Before their Presidency, both these great men served as Vice President, and one of them as Vice President while the other was President. The older man, John Adams, was Vice President under George Washington himself. All three were closely associated with Washington during our formative days, and to one of them, John Adams, goes the credit for playing a major part in throwing George Washington into the arms of destiny.

It was largely the action of John Adams that led the Continental Congress to appoint George Washington as commander-in-chief of the Revolutionary forces. Before that time Washington had been an outstanding sectional figure, a man of the South. In command of the Continental forces, he became a man of the country, and history knows full well how he played the part.

James Monroe, a younger man, appeared on the scene of action after the great political groundwork of founding the nation had been accomplished. But as a young man he played a gallant part on the field of battle, as a follower of Washington.

Strange to say, he at first opposed the Constitution of the United States, and, as a member of the Virginia Convention, elected to act on adoption of the Constitution, he voted against it. Yet he lived to become the President who enunciated a Doctrine that statesmen regard as no less a settled rule of American policy than the Constitution itself. James Monroe died on July 4, 1831; but the "Monroe Doctrine" is immortal.

The older men, Adams and Jefferson, are forever linked with George Washington as leaders in the movement that made America independent. Washington was distinctly the man of action, the soldier, the director of affairs, and without him the Revolution might never have moved to victory. But just as necessary were the philosophy of Jefferson in shaping our principles of government, and the abilities of Adams in waking and training popular opinion, a labor in which he had few peers. Both Adams and Jefferson served on the committee to draft the Declaration of Independence. Both signed the Declaration, and to one of them, Thomas Jefferson, belongs the immortal honor of having written that timeless instrument.

A BACKWARD STEP

In the past few years great progress has been made in rural electrification through the cooperation of agricultural colleges, farmers' organizations, government departments and the power companies. But now, if certain groups of politicians are to have their way, this development may be seriously retarded.

One or two states have passed legislation prohibiting power companies from selling electrical appliances, and similar legislation has been proposed in others. In some states such measures have been killed, but the agitation persists.

There is no doubt that the rapid extension of electric service to the farmer has been largely due to the energy and enterprise of the power people in marketing suitable devices for his use, allowing him to buy at reasonable prices and on favorable terms. This has aided rather than injured the business of other dealers, because the more farms served with electricity the greater number of potential customers there will be for all dealers.

In fact, in Tennessee the other electric dealers and service men have protested against the bill prohibiting competition by the power companies. Certainly there is no demand for such legislation on the part of the general public.

To any except demagogue politicians who thrive by their attacks on useful utilities and industries, interference with the development of rural electrification will appear as a backward step.

MILDEW ON ROSES

Powdery mildew, a disease which usually attacks all roses at some time or other during the growing season, can be reduced by growing the somewhat resistant varieties such as Paul's Scarlet, Mary Wallace, Silver Moon, etc., among the climbers; and avoiding very susceptible varieties like Crimson Rambler and Dorothy Perkins among the climbers, and Ophelia and Killarney among the hybrid teas.

Practice sanitation, provide favorable conditions for growth, and treat the plants with fungicides. Sanitation includes the collection and burning of diseased leaves. A humid atmosphere and an accumulation of moisture favors the development of powdery mildew, and infection may occur as a result of too close planting or of planting climbing roses near buildings.

The best fungicide for home gardens is a dust of 9 parts powdered sulphur and 1 part dry arsenate of lead. The applications of this dust should begin before the disease appears and must be repeated at regular intervals thru-out the season, taking care to coat the under side of the leaves thoroughly.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

Smooth Diet

I am glad to hear authors and intelligent physicians talking about the "smooth diet" for their chronic, constipated cases; there has been such an exhaustless stream of "roughage" advice. For a long time, the patient entering his doctor's office has been filled chock full of the roughage fad. This regardless of what is the real trouble in the sluggish bowel-wall.

A colon may be ulcerated, or narrowed from past disease. The X-ray is available now for accurate diagnosis; and roughage is absolutely contradicted in such conditions. It is safe to say that one-half the patients that get roughage advice get the very wrong thing for them.

Only one class of cases are benefitted by coarse diet, namely, the patients that have perfectly normal digestive tracts, other than over-loaded, neglected, habitually constipated colons. And these, I believe are in minority, among the patients that come to my office.

The contracted or ulcerated colon is made worse by roughage. No patient whose bowel is obstructed by a nest of hemorrhoids, and is constipated thereby, can ever be cured by a diet of roughage. He needs a good proctologist who will quickly set him right.

What is the smooth diet? Well, the soft green vegetables, such as "greens" and spinach; wilted lettuce and perfectly-prepared cabbage, or cauliflower; mushes and boiled rice; mashed potatoes—even baked potato, if perfectly cooked; eggs properly prepared; butter and a regulated amount of white bread; stewed fruits, ripe or dried; orange or grape-fruit, free from fiber; jellies, "jello," starch puddings, sweet potato; baked, boiled or stewed meats in moderation. Just plain milk and bread may make an evening meal if "whole milk." Of cake, the plain cookie in moderation should suffice. No more sugar should be used than is necessary to make food palatable. The same of salt and pepper. All these should be well borne, if there is no actual, organic disease. Breakfast wheat-cakes are smooth diet; but there should be no over-loading with syrup. Omit any of the above that disagree.

THE FLY NUISANCE

—o—

The fly nuisance in dairies is serious. Flies annoy cattle and are likely to contaminate the milk with disease or filth. Clean premises are essential—but cleanliness is not enough. The manure in which flies breed should be removed twice a week and scattered thin to destroy immature flies. Or pile the manure in a compact rick and treat the surface with a solution of 1 pound of borax in 2 gallons of water. Flytraps help—the conical trap described in Farmers' Bulletin 734-F is most effective. Blackstrap molasses diluted with three parts of water makes a satisfactory bait. Milk is good—or rotting bananas. Place traps outside the doors of dairy buildings where flies are thickest. Sprays are also helpful, but sprays alone will not control the nuisance. One pound of fresh pyrethrum flowers soaked for 48 hours or longer in a gallon of kerosene and strained through cheesecloth makes a good spray which kills both house flies and horn flies. Pyrethrum is used in some proprietary sprays, which may prove fairly economical for limited spraying. Or, buy a concentrated pyrethrum extract to mix with kerosene. Screen the milk room carefully. Large dairies and creameries often have screened vestibules. Other flies which annoy livestock are reduced in numbers by manure disposal and spraying.

The Scrap Book

By Harrison Smith Morris

When the bubble moon is young,
Down the sources of the breeze,
Like a yellow lantern hung
In the tops of blackened trees,
There is promise she will grow
Into beauty unforetold,
Into all unthought of gold.
Heigh ho!

When the Spring has dipped her foot,
Like a bather, in the air,
And the ripples warm the root
Till the little flowers dare,
There is promise she will grow
Sweeter than the Springs of old,
Fairer than was ever told.
Heigh ho!

But the moon of middle night,
Risen, is the rounded moon;
And the Spring of budding light
Eddies into just a June.
Ah, the promise—was it so?
Nay, the gift was fairy gold;
All the new is over-old.
Heigh ho!

SPRING PIG CROP LARGER IN COUNTRY BUT SHORT IN STATE

—o—

An increase of 2.5 per cent in the United States spring pig crop of this year over that of 1930 and a prospective sharp increase in the number of sows to farrow this coming fall are shown by the June pig survey covering about 77,000 farms made by the Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the Post Office Department through the rural mail carriers, reports F. W. Gist, Federal and State statistician:

The report shows that pigs saved in Alabama this spring were 11.5 per cent less than in 1930. The number of sows farrowed was 10.7 per cent less but the number of sows bred for fall farrowing was 35.7 per cent greater than the sows farrowed in 1930.

The reports of the number of sows bred or to be bred in the United States for farrowing in the fall of 1931 point to a marked increase in fall farrowing this year over last, if the relationship between breeding intentions and subsequently reported farrowing is about as shown in the preceding four years. The increase in breeding intentions shown for the fall of this year is the second largest shown in nine years.

If the June survey this year indicates the change in the markets supply of spring pigs from the corn belt states about as the June survey for the past four years have indicated these changes the market supply of hogs from the 1931 spring crop will be about 7 per cent larger than from the 1930 spring crop. This would represent an increase of about 1,750,000 head of hogs.

DAIRY TRAINED MEN RECEIVE EMPLOYMENT

Prof. A. D. Burke, head of the dairy department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn. has found employment fo rthe three young men who specialized in dairying and graduated at the recent commencement. W. F. Barnett is in dairy herd improvement work at Selma; E. E. Allredge is with the Frozen Custard Corporation at Birmingham; and Clifford Alston is with the Foremost Dairies milk station at Burkeville in Lowndes County.

Prof. Burke said that dairying opens a broad field to those interested in it as a vocation. "Aside from," he said, "the manufacture of ice cream, butter, cheese. milk powder and condensed milk which are industries in themselves, the field is open to those who are well trained in bacteriology and chemistry. Dairy inspection, market milk work and certain phases of public health administration demand a knowledge of these two latter subjects. Hence, the man engaged in dairy manufacturing is scarcely limited in a choice of his life's work.

"In the field of dairy production one finds many opportunities. While a student specializing along this line may primarily feel the urge to return to the farm better equipped to carry on—there are opportunities in farm management, and dairy herd improvement association work."

Prof. Burke has presented statistics on the dairy industry of the United States which is almost equivalent to cotton and cotton seed in the production of cash income, and cotton and cotton seed are cash leaders among American farm products. In total value milk exceeds cotton and cotton seed but much milk is never turned into cash.

KING COTTON'S COMPLAINT

—o—

King Cotton spoke with mournful air, while seated on his fleecy throne: "My subjects drive me to despair. I wish they'd learn to stand alone. They lean on me for everything; and all their burdens I must tote. Although I am a kindly king, I vow their methods get my goat. Each autumn, from my whitening fields, I bring to them a goodly rent; but little joy to them it yields because the coin's already spent. They buy on credit at the stores. most everything from pork to pills; to my account they charge the score, and I'm compelled to foot the bills. Eggs, bacon, beans, or onion sets, they buy them from the merchants' shelves; and keep me loaded down with debts for things they should produce themselves. They spread my credit out so thin it hurts my prestige and my fame. They play a game that cannot win, and when they lose, I get the blame. If they would raise a garden patch, and keep some pigs, say three or four, the wolf would not so often scratch the varnish from their kitchen door. If they would keep a cow or two, some hens of goodly ancestry, 'twould change their pessimistic view, and greatly ease the strain on me. I'm sure if they would do their part to live at home and board there, too, that I could help them get a start and own the comforts that are due. But when they ask me to supply each want, from soup to shingle-bob, I really must confess that I feel hardly equal to the job. If I were not compelled to dig for things their gardens should produce, for products of the cow or pig, the hen, the turkey or the goose, then I could help them hoard some dough, and slow but surely get ahead, and all my bounty would not go to pay for horses that are dead."

BUTLER FARMERS URGE USE COTTON BAGGING

Greenville, Ala., June 30.—A movement which it is hoped will spread nation-wide to increase the consumption of cotton through using it for cotton bagging and sacking for farmers' supplies, was inaugurated here by the board of directors of the Butler County Farm Bureau.

In a resolution, unanimously passed, the farmers who compose the governing body of the Butler organization, called upon the other 1837 county farm bureaus of the Nation to join them in demanding the "use of cotton sacks as containers for fertilizers, feeds, seeds, and other products used in the production of crops.

The resolution also requested the Alabama and American Farm Bureau Federations to "use their influence to cause a tariff to be placed upon jute so as to prohibit its importation into the United States."

The jute and cotton question was brought to the attention of the Butler farmers by J. S. Brunson in the meeting presided over by President W. M. Harrison, who appointed E. J. Hancock, E. O. Cates, and J. E. Helms to draw up a suitable resolution, which, after discussion, was passed without dissent.

TODAY AND TOMORROW

BY FRANK PARKER STOCKBRIDGE

RISKS —

The first reaction of everyone who read about the accident to the submarine "Nautilus" which disabled it while it was cruising on the surface from America to England, was how fortunate it was that this did not occur while the ship was under the Artic ice.

Perhaps Sir Hubert Wilkins and his crew are not proposing to take any more serious risks than did many of the pioneer aviators. In the case of flying it was fairly easy for anyone, however, to recognize the value of these early experiments if they should prove successful. It is difficult to see any possible value to humanity, or importance to science, in the effort to reach the North Pole by a submarine boat.

It looks, to an impartial observer, as if human life were being risked merely to provide thrills, just as a circus performer provides them.

RADIODYNAMICS —

That is the word coined by John Hays Hammond, Jr., and now accepted by the patent office and Congress, to mean the control of energy at a distance by means of radio.

Hammond began to experiment with radiodynamics when he was a student in Yale in 1909. He invented a method of controlling a boat on the surface of the water and a torpedo under the surface by radio impulses, as well as steering an airplane over a long course without a pilot on board.

This is something quite different from transmitting power by radio. Only enough power can be transmitted to set a piece of machinery in motion or stop it. The machenery must have its own independent power plant. The day may come when actual power can be sent through the air, but that is a long way in the future.

Interest in collegiate football is declining, the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching reports.

There is a very decided difference between sports participated in by students for the benefit of the students themselves, for the maintenance of their health and the upbuilding of their morale, and sports undertaken as a means of advertising particular colleges or of making money.

Nobody is spggesting that all intercollegiate sporting contests should be abolished, but it is certainly true that public interest in them is declining, and it is probable that they will play a less important part in college life in the future than in the past.

ROCKETS —

Prof. Robert H. Goddard, of Clark University, who has been experimenting with and talking about propelling aircraft by means of rockets, has taken out patents on a rocket-propelled airplane. The plane is expected to rise from the ground like any other plane, its propellers being turned by a turbine engine, for which the gas from a succession of rockets will furnish the power. When it gets into the rarified upper atmosphere the engine will be cut off and the propulsive force will be that of the rockets themselves.

Prof. Goddard is no idle visionary. Just what he has got in his desert laboratory in New Mexico he is not telling the world as yet, but if anyone in this country is going to succeed in flying by means of rockets Prof. Goddard will probably be the first.

A blue homing pigeon flew 503½ miles from Salisbury, N. C., to New York City, in 13 hours, 11 minutes and 51 seconds the other day. This was not quite a record for the 500 mile annual pigeon race, but it comes very close to it.

A large part of a homing pigeon's time in flying long distances, however, is taken up in the bird's questing, or circling at high altitudes to find landmarks to guide it back to its home loft. There is no longer any great mystery about how the homing pigeon finds its way home at night or in a dense fog or conditions of low visibility. Like almost all birds, however, it has telescopic powers of vision beyond anything which human beings can easily imagine, according to Dr. Casey Wood, famous oculist, who has devoted many years to the study of the eyes of birds. The homing pigeon memorizes landmarks near its home loft, and, as it is given longer and longer flight trials, it learns the lay of the land at greater distances, until it knows the country so well that, when liberated within 500 miles from home on a clear day, it can see some remembered landmark in the direction of its home.

LYNCHING RECORD FOR THE FIRST SIX MONTHS OF 1931

According to the records compiled at Tuskegee Institute in the Department of Records and Research that in the first six months of 1931 there were lynchings. This is 4 less than the number, 9, for the first six months of 1930; 1 more than the number, 4, for the first six months of 1929; it is the same as the number, 5, for the first months of 1928; 6 less than the number 11, for the first six months of 1927 and is 4 less than the number, 9, for the first six months of each of the years, 1926 and 1925; it is the the number, 5, for the first six m of 1924; 10 less than the number, for the first six months of 1923; 25 less than the number, 30, for the first six months of 1922, and 31 less than the number, 36, for the first six months of 1921.

There were 32 instances in which officers of the law prevented lynching. Of these 4 were in Northern and Western States and 28 in Southern States. In 26 of the instances the prisoner were removed or the guards augmented. In the 6 other instances used. Thus a total of 55 pers whites and 45 negroes, were saved from death at the hands of mobs.

Of the persons lynched 1 was white and 4 were negroes. The charged were attempted rape, 3, murder, 2.

The states in which lynchings occurred and the number in each State are as fololws: Mississippi, 2 Missouri, 1; North Dakota, 1; Tennessee, 1

Gets Apology From Petain.

I took occasion a few days later to let Petain know very politely what I thought of the impropriety of this sort of thing and also criticized him then and there for telling anybody, even Mr. House, as he had done, about the plan to attack the St. Mihiel salient as the first offensive by the American army. I was pleased with Petain's apology and his statement that there would be no further action of this kind on his part.

As a matter of fact, I think the French erroneously regarded House as a sort of special ambassador, and thought that they could lay the foundation for an approach through him to the question of amalgamation.

Just before his return to the States House said to me that he entirely agreed with me, and that he felt sure the President and secretary of war intended to leave the whole question regarding the disposition of our troops to my judgment. Assurance on this point was in no sense necessary, as I had full confidence that this was the case.

During his stay in France I formed a high opinion of House's ability. We formed a friendship in the beginning which enabled us to discuss all matters most freely and frankly. Before he left for home he and I arranged for confidential communication by cable should it become necessary to reach Mr. Baker or Mr. Wilson direct.

The Missing Turkeys

Immediately upon my return to headquarters at Chaumont December 1917, General Harbord reported there had been a shortage of turkeys and other essentials of a truly American Thanksgiving dinner, and in a facetious manner deplored the heartlessness of a staff at Washington that would so neglect our troops.

He stated that the shortage was due to these supplies, which had been ordered in September for delivery November 1, being buried under a large cargo that could not be unloaded in time. The following cable was sent as written by Harbord:

"On September 18 supplies for Thanksgiving were ordered. Your cablegram stated mincemeat shipped on Montanan. There was no mincemeat on Montanan. Mincemeat arrived November 26 on Powhatan, underneath heavy cargo, which it was necessary to discharge before mincemeat could be unloaded. Result mincemeat aboard ship Thanksgiving day. Sweet potatoes arrived on Dakotan and could not be unloaded until November 22; result, some troops did not have sweet potatoes. It was necessary to buy geese to fill requisitions on account of part of turkeys not arriving, notwithstanding the fact that Thanksgiving supplies were ordered to arrive in France November 1."

Although we had treated this matter lightly, I really felt regret that some of our troops had been deprived of a homelike Thanksgiving dinner, and at the same time I was not at all pleased to have further evidence of careless loading of ships.

Need Two Regular Divisions.

In considering the composition of our expeditionary forces, it was a question whether we ought to organize higher units by using regular regiments, with a proportionate number of new officers, or utilize the permanent commissioned personnel of the line for equitable assignment to the citizen contingents and leave our regular organizations to be completed from the relatively raw material at our disposal, and thus build up all categories of the army simultaneously. I recommended that regular regiments at Honolulu and elsewhere be relieved for this purpose by National Guard regiments. These regular troops would more nearly approximate the standards of our allies at the start, and, more important still, their use would diminish the chances of reverses during our first encounters with the enemy. The acting chief of staff at home, Maj. Gen. John Biddle, agreed with my suggestion, but the widely separated locations of these regiments made their replacement somewhat difficult, and only the Third, Fourth and Fifth divisions came in time for service early in 1918, the Sixth and Seventh arriving to take part in the fall campaign.

CHAPTER XXIV

The progress of our preparation at home at this time (December, 1917) was far from being satisfactory, as tests of newly arrived troops showed their instruction was not up to our standards in France.

It was evident that my recommendations were being disregarded. This faulty training at home threw an extra burden upon us of training officers and men after their arrival.

I had urged that we should follow our own conception of training, emphasizing the rifle and bayonet as the supreme weapons of the infantry soldier, and insisted upon training for open warfare.

The training of officers for the general staff, which also necessarily had to be undertaken in France, was well under way at the general staff school, at Langres, forty miles south of Chaumont, under the able direction of Major General McAndrew. The three months' course of instruction was based upon our staff organization and was conducted by our own instructors, with two or three French and an equal number of British officers to assist as lecturers. The difficulty was the scarcity of officers available for detail as students.

We were confronted with the task of building up an army of millions that would require as many trained staff officers as we had officers in the whole regular army at the beginning of the war. To meet this urgent demand Washington was asked to send over in advance a small percentage of officers from each division for instruction, but only a few ever came.

My diary notes the following:

Chaumont, Wednesday, Jan. 2, 1918.—Both French and British pressing us for amalgamation.

Went to Marshal Haig's headquarters Friday by rail, accompanied by Colonel Wagstaff, and spent the night. Motored through heavy snowdrifts out from Etaples; gangs of "conscientious objectors" opening up roads. Discussed with Sir Douglas possible shipment by and training of American troops with British.

Visited king and queen of Belgium and their army at Adenkirke on Saturday.

As we have seen, there has been some talk of the British providing shipping to bring over American troops for training behind their lines. During the evening I spent with Sir Douglas Haig, as noted in the diary, he presented his plans for training our troops. His idea was to place the battalions as they arrived, one to the brigade, in selected British divisions, preferably those serving on the southern part of their front, and then gradually to increase the number of battalions until the division should become wholly American.

Hoping to commit the British definitely on the question of tonnage, which up to that time we had not succeeded in doing, I did not offer serious objection to the plan and even approved some of the features, especially those pertaining to the earlier part of the proposed training, and for the moment the question was left open for further conference.

Causes King to Wait.

I left British headquarters the next morning en route to the Belgian front to pay my respects to the king and queen. As Sir Douglas was off to London my car was attached to his train and we traveled together to Boulogne, where he boarded the channel boat and I took a special, consisting of my car and one other, and proceeded on my way.

We were due at Adenkirke, my destination, at a fixed hour, but to my surprise the train pulled in ten minutes ahead of time. I was changing into my best uniform—in fact, was just putting on the right boot—when my aid, Colonel Boyd, stuck his head in at the door of my compartment and said breathlessly: "General, we have arrived."

I knew it only too well, as the train had stopped and the royal band outside was playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" in the mournful cadence common to foreign bands. It was an embarrassing thought that I should be late. In another minute, when the orderly and myself were struggling, this time with the left boot, Boyd again appeared and said in a stage whisper that was no doubt heard by the entire escort outside: "Sir, the king is out there standing at the salute."

That was too much, the humor of the situation overcame me and for an instant all of us, including the orderly, who rarely smiled, were convulsed with laughter. That did not help matters, of course, and meanwhile the band outside, which had already played the national air through three times, was dolefully beginning on the fourth, when I hurriedly descended the steps of my car opposite his majesty, buttoning my overcoat with one hand and saluting with the other.

At my appearance the band started afresh and, as though they had just begun, ran through our national anthem rather more vigorously, cheered up no doubt at last to see me in evidence. A few months later I had the courage to relate the incident in all its details to their majesties and they both seemed to enjoy it immensely.

King Decorates Pershing.

After inspecting the escort in company with the king, he and I drove to their residence, where the queen, in her most gracious manner, received us at the entrance. We had a very enjoyable luncheon, which Boyd thought was quite gay, especially when I became bold enough to air my dreadful French. After lunch King Albert, to my surprise, said he wished to bestow upon me the Order of the Grand Cordon of Leopold, and as I hesitated, saying that we were not permitted to receive foreign decorations, he insisted that I should accept it conditionally, which, of course, was the only thing to do. Boyd was decorated also.

In the afternoon the king, with his chief of staff, took me to his G. H. Q. and then to the front-line trenches, explaining the disposition of the limited force with which their positions were held. It consisted of only the six divisions which had stubbornly retired in 1914 in the face of overwhelming odds. It was then being recruited by Belgians escaping from within the German lines at the risk of their lives.

A member of my church in a former pastorate had a daughter who rode much, but she never traveled far. There was a driveway in the city that formed a circle, and I have counted the times that the girl would pass my home going in the same direction in one afternoon, and often the number would mount to fifteen. She rode for hours, but she rode in a circle. The father told me that the gas bill of his daughter amounted to forty dollars per month. She traveled many miles at much expense, but she never went anywhere. A friend stopped at the parsonage last week, and after spending a few moments with us, she arose to go. I asked, "And where are you going?" She replied, "I do not know where we are going, but we are in a hurry." These two pictures are true to the life of today. We are eternally in a hurry, but we are riding in a circle. We spend much money and shed much perspiration in our rush, but we never go anywhere, and people never accuse us of doing much. We are riding like Jehu, but we are traveling in a circle.

Last Friday night the Methodist church in Clanton sponsored the "Passion Play" going to quite a bit of effort to give to the people of our city a play that was Christian, and one that was elevating. People were invited to see the life of Christ in moving play as it was partially lived in Palestine, but Christ never received a colder reception in Judea, than the people of Clanton gave to this wonderful picture of His life. There were only thirty people in the auditorium of the High School building to see this picture. There was no kissing in that picture, except when a penitent woman fell at the feet of the Master and kissed His feet. There was no hugging in that picture except when Martha and Mary hugged Lazarus, their brother, as he came out of the tomb. There were no bed scenes in that picture except when an invalid was brought to Christ for healing. There was no infidelity in that picture except when Judas betrayed his Lord. All of that is too tame for the vulgar mind of today. We want fast riding, much shooting, abundance of suggestion, much blood, and lot of sex display. May the Lord have mercy on our souls.

A Scout friend of mine was walking through a school building and came upon the sexton busy at his task. This husky black man had found a worn out American flag in the building, and he was using it as a dust mop. On seeing the Stars and Stripes in the hands of the sexton, being used as a dust cloth, this Scout leaped upon him, snatched the flag from his hands, and then read the riot act to that man of dark shade. The Scout said, "How dare you use the flag of my country for a dust cloth?" He then took that old tattered flag, folded it with care, placed it on a table, saluted it and then carried it away to be disposed of according to Scout reverence. Saturday is the 4th of July, and the flags of our country will be on display. When you see the Stars and Stripes, salute them with reverence. If the flag is large or small, it stands for our American liberty, it stands for our civilized laws, and it stands for our Christian ideals. Never make the color of white, representing the purity of our ideals, never make the color of red, representing the shed blood of our ancestry, never make the color of blue, representing the sky line of our liberty, things that are common. That old flag is sacred, and it should be handled in reverence. The flag is not a play thing for child life, it is out of place as decorations on cars, it should never be worn on the lapel of the coat. It represents to us the most sacred things of our national life, and that flag should float high in the breezes, that we may look up to it as the sacred embodiment of our patriotism.

A modern man begins the day with the crimes of yesterday served to him as he is at his breakfast table. He runs through the columns of the daily to read about the suicides, the homicides, the car wrecks, the divorce courts, the sex battles and national differences. Then he goes out to spend the day in close contact with the selfish scheming, and close competition of the business world. He feels the keen lash of competition below the belt, and the horrid hurt of deception and dishonesty in almost every trade. When the day is over he goes out for the night and at the picture show, or in the theater he is served with false standards and moral rot that is enough to eat out the very foundation of his honor and integrity. The modern man being served this daily diet, what can we expect but to have moral rags everywhere? Men are absenting themselves from the house of God, and there is a moral rot that is setting up that is alarming in its nature. The time has come when men and women should be aroused to think upon whatsoever things are true, honest, virtuous and of good report. If men would change their moral daily diet, we would have different conditions throughout the land. When men feast on the truth, the truth shall make them free, but when they feed on the dregs, the sediments of society, a fullness of that deposit never fails to make them mad and corrupt.

PAINS QUIT COMING

"When I was a girl, I suffered periodically with terrible pains in my back and sides. Often I would bend almost double with the intense pain. This would last for hours and I could get no relief.

"I tried almost everything that was recommended to me, but found nothing that would help until I began taking Cardui. My mother thought it would be good for me, so she got a bottle of Cardui and started me taking it. I soon improved. The bad spells quit coming. I was soon in normal health."

Not So Bad

B. C. Balch, of Conway county, Arkansas, is a one-armed man who nevertheless practices two-armed farming in the truest sense of the word. Twenty-one years ago, with $900 in cash, 2 cows, a bull, an old gray mare, a mule colt and some farm tools, he undertook to pay $1,400 for 80 acres of what was considered about the most run-down land to be found anywhere. So many two-fisted men had failed to make a living on the place that the community thought it would be just a matter of time until one-armed Balch and his family would be down and out.

And he did get off to a bad start, what with an unprecedented drouth and total crop failure marking his first year. He didn't make enough money to pay his taxes and had to borrow enough money to buy groceries for his family. But his two cows and a third that he managed to buy saved the day for him and were the start of a dairy venture that now brings him a gross income of $1,000 a month.

Pasture development has kept pace with the growth of Mr. Balch's dairy herd. When he first bought it the land was so poor it took several acres to grow enough grass for a cow. Now, the same land will grow enough grass to graze a cow per acre and cut enough hay to carry her through the winter. Dairy products, strawberries, sweet potatoes, hay poultry products and high yields of cotton, corn and other crops account for the gross income of $12,000 per year that Mr. Balch has averaged for the past five years from his 200-acre farm which now represents an investment of $28,000.

The Woman
who has never used either of our two leading flours is unaware of their goodness, naturally, and to her we make this suggestion. Get a bag of either Cadick's Gold Dust (It's White!) or Cadick's CA-MI-CO (It's White!) and make up a batch of biscuits or a cake. If the results aren't as fine as any she has ever had, the flour costs her nothing. That's how good we know our two flours to be.

GOOD COTTON OFTEN MISTAKEN FOR BAD

As late as 1928-29 private cotton buyers were frequently "mistaking" an extra white, strict middling, inch-and-a-sixteenth bale of cotton for a blue half and half dog-tail, according to reports given in government publications

The "Farm Price of Cotton Related to Quality," a bulletin published by the Georgia Experiment Station and U. S. Department of Agriculture, shows, along with other publications, that some farmers received $32.50 per bale less than others for the same quality of cotton, in the same town, on the same date in 1928-29. The bulletin reports that differences of $20 per bale were frequent.

"Twenty dollars to $32.50 a bale seems like a big 'mistake' to us, but we don't ask the cotton shippers to look into it just now," said J. A. Beaty, acting manager of the Alabama Farm Bureau Cotton Association. "They have right serious problems, like pinning the world depression, prohibition, and the pink boll worm, on the Farm Board. Later, maybe they will have time to explain how that $32.50 'mistake' is the untrammelled working of the laws of supply and demand."

"I can readily see how it "cramps their style' when cooperative associations put out quotations daily, showing the value on the days market for every grade and staple and supplying the services of federally licensed graders employed by the farmers themselves to fix that grade and staple," he added.

A DAUGHTER'S TRAINING

Among the replies received in response to a request for a brief plan for training a daughter, a magazine received the following from a successful mother:

Teach your daughter to value a man, not by wealth, looks or family, but by his character and what he himself has done.

Discourage her in looking upon men as suitors until she is at least 18.

Give her an education and keep her employed part of the time during vacation.

Make her home pleasant, so that she will not be anxious to leave it for an inferior one.

Encourage her to attend church, Sunday school, club meetings and other places where the right kind of people may be met, urging her to be particularly careful in choosing her girl associates.

These are all excellent suggestions, even though they do not always secure the desired results, and the mother who follows them will have done about all that is possible to do for her daughter.

The Fall Crop Of Irish Potatoes

The two main factors limiting the production of fall grown Irish potatoes in Alabama are (1) climatic conditions in some sections of the state during July and August, and (2) through force of necessity spring grown seed are usually planted which generally result in a poor stand. Of course, climatic conditions cannot be controlled, but results during the past few years have shown that we may materially increase the sprouting of new or spring grown potatoes by a comparatively simple treatment. Certain sections in north Alabama seem particularly adapted to the production of a fall crop of potatoes where a stand is secured, and these recommendations should prove of greatest interest in these sections.

Ethelene chlohydrin is the material which has been found to be most effective in hastening the sprouting of new potatoes. This treatment is as follows:

1. Mix 1 pint of 40 per cent ethelene chlorhydrin in 4 gallons of water.
2. Cut potatoes as usual before planting. Where small potatoes are used which are not cut before planting, slice off one side of peeling to permit direct action of the chemical.
3. Dip potatoes in solution just long enough to make sure they are thoroughly wet.
4. As soon as potatoes are dipped they should be placed in a fairly tight container, cover over top, and allowed to remain for 24 to 36 hours. To avoid overheating, which usually results in decay of the potatoes after planting, this container should be kept in a cool place while the potatoes are going thru this treatment.
5. The potatoes should be planted at the end of the treating period (24 to 36 hours). They should be planted about 6 inches deep to avoid excessive heating from the sun and first few inches of top soil.

See county agent for further information.

CHURCH CONFERENCE TO BE ANNUAL EVENT

Ministers and other church workers of Alabama who attended the rural church conference at Auburn, June 22 to 26, were unanimous in asking that such a conference be made an annual event at Auburn. They declared that the first conference was very beneficial to them and asked that the program for next year be enlarged and more ministers and laymen in church work attend.

More than one hundred actual ministers attended the conference. Laymen and rural workers present increased the total attendance to more than two hundred. Many denominations were represented, although the conference was entirely non-denominational.

In addressing the conference Professor L. N. Duncan explained that the program of this the initial conference was arranged to acquaint those present with the rural forces of the state, and with a view to using this as a spring board for future conferences. He asked that the ministers prepare the program with such help as they wish the extension service of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute to give them each year. In this way each conference will meet the wishes of ministers and other church workers, he said.

During the week the work that is being done in Alabama for the improvement of agriculture, the home, education, child welfare, and health was explained by officials in charge. This brought the various forces and agencies into closer relations and gave the church workers a better understanding of each. Consequently, the service of each will be improved, Prof. Duncan said.

Two motor boats were placed in use and those taking part in this affair enjoyed several rides on the river. At a later hour, a well prepared and delicious picnic lunch was served under the shade trees near the conveniently located and furnished cabin of the camp. Those sharing in this outing were

INTEREST BEING SHOWN OVER CO. ON VETCH, PEAS

Progressive Farmers State Their Experiences In Favorable Words

Interest is being shown as steadily increasing over the urgent request by the County Agent, business men and progressive farmers of the county that more vetch and Austrian winter peas be planted this year, to serve as winter cover crops and as food for stock.

In this issue there appears an ad over the signature of the Peoples Savings Bank, of Clanton, showing additional reasons why it pays to plant vetch and Austrian winter peas. The office of the County Agent has been receiving requests for information regarding these items, and much information has been mailed out by them.

In commenting on the planting of such crops, and speaking from experiences, several farmers, and other citizens of the county have made most favorable comments on it. Following are some of the comments received in regard to this, this week:

L. C. Keen has this to say about vetch: "I've tried vetch enough to know that I'm going to plant it as long

CALF CLUB MEETING

On Thursday, June 18, 1931, the Clanton Calf Club met at its usual meeting place at Mr. Stapp's office. The club had with them Mr. F. W. Burns, a livestock specialist from Auburn. The boys first went to the farm of Judge L. H. Reynolds, near the Cotton Mill to judge hogs. All the boys made splendid placings and ratings.

We then came back to town and were carried to the Kiwanis Club, where everyone enjoyed a good dinner. There Mr. Stapp called on three of the boys to make talks on judging hogs, dairy cattle and to tell the difference between dairy and beef cattle. Mr. Burns was also called on to explain the purpose of all 4-H Clubs. After luncheon we went to the barn of Mr. Bay Fiquette to judge dairy cattle.

On account of Mr. Burns having to leave we adjourned until the next meeting.

INSTITUTE AT BAPTISTCHURCH DRAWS CROWDS

Report Superintendent Shows Splendid Work Done Here Recently

Those who attended the Unity-Chilton Institute held at Clanton Baptist church last week had a feast of good things. Dr. L. O. Dawson was at his best. Our missionaries, Rev. J. L. Moye, Chile, and Miss Mary Ellen Caver, Africa, told of personal experiences and presented missions in a wonderful way. Every member of the faculty made his or her book intensely interesting. Anyone desiring a seal on Torrey's little book, "How to Pray," should read the book and answer the following questions:

1. Name four reasons why persistent prayer is needed. 2. Give a reason why prayer is so important. 3. Why do we link obeying with praying? 4. (a) In whose name should our prayers always be given? (b) Through which two things may we know the will of

FIVE PEOPLE IN CO. ARE VICTIMS OF MAD DOGS

Three Beasts Show Positive Tests; State Health Official Blames Carelessness

Montgomery, Ala., July 7.—Within the past three days, three mad dogs have bitten five people at Clanton, according to records at the State Laboratory, where tests established that the dogs were affected with hydrophobia. All of the persons bitten are taking the anti-rabies serum treatment

Back of the appearance of the three mad dogs is a situation causing it, that could have been avoided, Dr. L.C. Havens, director of the Laboratory, said yesterday. Some two months ago, he stated, one rabid dog bit a number of other dogs, also several people. All of the people attacked took the anti-rabies serum. The canine preventive serum was given to a few of the more valuable dogs bitten, but these and the others not treated, were not confined.

The result, Dr. Havens said, is that

This vicinity was represented as usual in the happy opening this week at Eagle's Nest Camp for Girls, Brevard, North Carolina,—this time by Miss Peggy Page of Clanton, charming little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John C. Page.

Settlers Of Thorsby Have Annual Picnic On July 4; Horse Shoe Pitching Takes The Day

The annual old-settlers picnic held at Thorsby each year on July 4th brought together again this year, many of the first residents of Thorsby at the Carlson grove just north of Thorsby.

Many of those present at this home-coming Saturday, came many miles to meet once again with their neighbors who fought and struggled in Chilton County to make the town of Thorsby years ago. The group this year was somewhat smaller than was gathered together last year, as several of the settlers of that place were unable to attend.

There are perhaps very few things more enjoyable to these people than the annual home-coming held each year. The group gathered at the Carlson grove, a most desirable place for an affair of this kind, in the morning, and almost immediately those who have gone on somewhat in years began to bring out pleasant memories of the years gone by and the struggle they encountered in settling the place now known as Thorsby.

A bountiful picnic lunch was spread on a long table under the shade of large trees, at the noon hour, and the affair was interrupted for several minutes by an uninvited, but somewhat needed, shower of rain. This however, only tended to make the afternoon more enjoyable by bringing cool breezes to the erstwhile warm afternoon.

It did not take the men and boys long to inaugurate a series of games of horse shoe pitching in the shady spots of the grove, and with interest so high, it was rather difficult to discontinue the games long enough to eat the delicious and well prepared lunch the ladies had so tastefully arranged on the long picnic style table. It was apparent that Frank Nelson, one of the early settlers of Thorsby along with Mayor Carl Peterson, were fully ready to partake of some of the choice morsels of the picnic lunch at that hour.

In the afternoon, the men separated from the charming ladies at the gathering, began in earnest their horse shoe pitching again. Interest began to increase each time a shoe went toward the stake, and with the coaching of the mayor of Thorsby, Carl Peterson, and the arguing of Frank Nelson, the games reached a point to where it was becoming difficult to determine who was likely to be termed champion. M. J. Soberg sauntered into the games and after a while seemed to get the slant on the idea and the stakes began to get hit after hit from his horse shoes. Ernie (Jiggs) Hanson, with his quiet yet witty manners, took on considerable interest and showed the pitchers a few ringers now and then, while Martin Nelson, one of the younger residents and son of Frank Nelson, showed that he had been practicing somewhere and the shoes seemed to be drawn toward the stakes. Frank Nelson was accused of having been practicing before he came down to the picnic, and it was found that he had, having done some fine pitching at the picnic on July 4, 1930. Perhaps unintentionally, Mayor Peterson would drop a shoe within very close range of the stake, and express his regret, shadowed by a witty remark and a smile of satisfaction. Emil Borg unbuttoned his shirt collar and without any great amount of words, would step up to the line and his horse shoes would drop in close range to the stakes except in times when they seemed to have rubber on them and would bounce away.

Nels Peterson made his appearance along later in the afternoon and in his attempt to show "how it was done" the shoes and the stakes came in close contact with each other, now and then. Had it been bolts from a railroad, in-

Chilton Co. Has Chance To Secure Hatchery If Site Can Be Found

An opportunity has presented itself to Chilton County, by which a fish hatchery can be had provided a suitable site is shown as a location for the hatchery, according to Hon. W. B. Oliver, Congressman, who advised the county of this fact in a letter to Judge L. H. Reynolds, recently.

A meeting has been called and set for next Friday afternoon, July 10th, at four o'clock at the courthouse, at which time anyone who has in mind a prospective site is asked to be present and tell of it. Following is the statement from Congressman Oliver in regard to the hatchery.

"There is now available for expenditure in Alabama $50,000 for the purpose of establishing a Fish Hatchery. The Bureau of Fisheries desires to inspect any suitable sites in your County you may have to offer. I understand the Bureau will want about 100 acres of land and the contour of the land must be such that numerous small ponds can be made from time to time thereon as

Results Of Legion Fights Here On 4th

The reception which the people of Clanton and Chilton County accorded the first boxing and wrestling show to be staged by the local post of the American Legion, proved disappointing in the extreme. As far as gate receipts and public interest in the fight was concerned the results were almost nil. In spite of the fights being well advertised several weeks previous to the date on which they were held, the public manifested practically no interest whatsoever. There was practically no advance seat sale and when the fight opened there were only a few fans in the park. After the card was half finished and after an unsuccessful attempt to clear the fences of knothole peepers referee Scholder opened the gates and a fairly good crowd came in free of charge.

The fighting card which was the first which the local legion post has sponsored, was staged Saturday afternoon in the local ball park. The fights and wrestling bouts were arranged by promoter Scholder of Birmingham who refereed the bouts.

An unexpected rain coming a few minutes before the show was to be staged also went a long ways toward decreasing the number in attendance.

The main attraction was a ten-round bout between White Saylors of Birmingham and Jimmie Musso of Bessemer. Neither fighter seemed to have any decided advantage over his opponent. Nor did either fighter seem very anxious to mix with his opponent, each attempting to see if he could feint the other off his guard. Consequently the main bout of the program was more of a dancing and sparring match than a real fight.

The program was opened with a battle royal between six negroes. The negroes were from Clanton and there was perhaps more real fighting done in this bout than in any of the others.

The second match was fought between Johnny Bass of Bessemer and Crowson of Clanton This was a three-round fight and Crowson has probably a slight advantage over his opponent in spite of a nose that was bleeding profusely at the end of the fight.

The first wrestling bout was fought between Bill Edwards, 157 pounds, of Birmingham, and Ed Henson, 175 pounds, of Tupelo, Mississippi. Edwards took the first fall in 13 minutes. Henson took the second fall in five minutes and the match was called a draw.

The second boxing match was held between two negroes, Earl Weaver of Birmingham and Kid Sampson of Detroit. This fight went three rounds with Weaver having the best of the fighting. The negro from Detroit seemed more interested in covering up and keeping out of his opponent's way than he was in fighting. When Sampson was able to catch his opponent, which was seldom enough, he seemed unable or unwilling to press the fight.

The second wrestling match also resulted in a draw. Jack Freeman, 200 pounds, of Birmingham, and Big Boy Taylor, 185 pounds, of Birmingham, fought the one hour limit each taking a fall.

Chairman Shouse Approves Hoover's Moratorium Proposal — Names Issues in Georgia Speech

Washington, July 6.—In giving approval of President Hoover's proposal for a one-year moratorium on international war debt payments, Jouett Shouse, Chairman, Democratic National Executive Committee, in a speech at Atlanta at a dinner of the Young Men's Democratic League of Georgia in honor of Governor-elect Richard B. Russell, Jr., took occasion to deny the statement of administration defenders that Democrats have found fault with everything the President does. "That, of course, was never true," Chairman Shouse said. "We have not hesitated to criticize acts that merited condemnation.

"It is gratifying," he continued, "to be able to endorse and to commend, and that I do without hesitancy or reservation, in connection with the recent proclamation of the President calling for a year's truce in all international debts. His position shows statesmanship, courage and decision. If followed, the plan that he has outlined will give the world a breathing space and Germany, in particular, will be relieved for the time being of the burdens that have been pressing her and which conceivably might have led to a collapse. Such a result would have reacted with terrific force on the political and economic structure of the entire world. In such a crisis, with so much at stake, it is gratifying that the President has taken the position he has taken and it but made the burdens of many coun- is to be hoped he will meet with support at the hands of patriotic citizens generally.

"I look for no party obstruction to the President's purpose," he said. . . . "My prophecy is that a majority of our delegation in Congress will cooperate to the fullest extent with the program.

"I do think he (the President) might have gone further and that he delayed unduly in arriving at his present state of mind. . . . I welcome the act of the President, even though in my opinion no small part of the conditions which compelled it are due to the administration's own deeds."

The speaker discussed the Hawley-Smoot tariff, which he said "not only ruined our import and export trade, tries so unbearable that industrial and governmental collapse became an actual danger."

Other issues, he said, were "lack of prosperity, unemployment and constructive farm relief."

Discussing the question of prohibition, which the speaker said he did not regard as a paramount issue, he reviewed the proposal of the Chairman of the Democratic National Committee for a solution of this problem and for a straight out declaration upon the question by the National Convention, and said: "I believe that there is greater peril in evasion than in declaration."

Psychology of Hoover Indiana Speech Tested Out By New Convert

Washington, July 6.—The psychological effect of President Hoover's Indianapolis speech upon the writer of a letter to the editor of the Charlotte (N.C.) Observer, is thus set forth:

"It (the speech' has enlightened me and made me understand all economic wisdom. I now see that old Adam Smith was simply suffering from the blues when he penned his economic thesis which the passing decades have stamped as a classic.

"I, like many other misinformed and misled people, have been thinking that we were going through what the ignorant call a panic. . . . But after reading Mr. Hoover's speech, I have discovered that the panic or depression so called is a delusion and a snare. It does not exist. We have all been suffering from mental myopia and economic strabismus. We have been able to look thru the 'mists' of the depression, or, better still, get 'more confidence' and the mists will fade away. 'Tis as simple as that.

"A poor crippled chap stopped me on the street. He was under the delusion that he was hungry. I gave him Mr. Hoover's speech and told him to have confidence. He was healed on the spot and his delusion was lifted.

" . . . A contumacious citizen came to me laboring under the notion that he had no job, and argued that his baby had no milk and that he had no money to buy it. I gave him the President's speech and told him to go home and face his cow with confidence and that she would supply the needed nourishment. . . . He advised me that he had no cow. Now woe is me! What shall I tell him?

"TOM J. JIMISON."

It was Senator Caraway, as we recall, who said of Mr. Hoover's Twenty-Year plan: "It is not a plan at all, it is a dream."

Official Church Paper Sharply Criticizes Incidents in the Scheme to "Humanize Hoover"

Washington, July 6.—Concerning the Republican campaign to "Humanize Hoover," The Living Church, official publication of the Episcopal Church, published at Milwaukee, comments as follows:

"Especially does the whole program touch upon morals when children are used to promote publicity. Why should little Peggy Hoover, the grand-daughter of the President, be made the theme of a column of slushily sentimental description as she enjoys herself at the circus? Will it contribute to her modest usefulness for future years to be pushed into the limelight at the tender age of five? What is the type of mind of the 'publicity hound' who will send out descriptions of what clothes Peggy wore to the circus, intimate revelations of her conversations with the little girl who was her companion, and photographs of the 'little lady of the White House' who, after all, was only one of several thousand little ones who went to the circus on that day?

"Again: a boy caught in a blizzard with his young companions does a brave deed. He deserves recognition as a modest hero. But unless the hero stays modest, the time may come when all who meet him will regret that his name ever became known. It may 'humanize Hoover' to have columns of newspaper publicity about the boy's visit for a week at the White House. What does it do for the boy?

"It brings up the whole question as to the American attitude toward children. Is it sane and sensible? Or is it silly and sentimental?"

Weather forecasters see no indication of a drought in 1931, but in the realm of politics and economics the "Hoover Blight" still remains.

How To Eat More Eggs Explained

Last year thirty-six billion eggs were produced and eaten in the United States. They were eaten for breakfast, luncheon, dinner, or supper, in numerous ways. A New York hotel, for example offered to patrons 141 egg dishes.

These facts about eggs were printed in a recent issue of McCall's Magazine, the article being written by Beulah V. Gilaspie who continued:

"Then, you use eggs as a Thickening for sauces, pie filling, boiled dressing and custards.

"Eggs become a source of Leavening when you use them in puffy omelets, suoffles, sponge and angel cakes.

"They are a coating agent when you dip cutlets, croquettes, and other foods in them before frying

"For muffins, cookies, croquettes, and some kinds of cake you use them as a Binder to hold other ingredients together.

"They improve the texture of frozen mixtures, because they act as a sort of Wrapper around the crystals, preventing them from collecting in lumps.

"If you ever make clear broth or soup stock, you pin your faith on eggs as a Clarifier.

"Mayonnaise, Hollandaise, and similar emulsions demand eggs as a Stabilizer—a term I shall explain later.

"As a Garnish for salads, cold meats and some kinds of fish, eggs have no rival

"Lastly, eggs improve the Flavor, Color and Texture of the products in which they are used."

A Statesmanlike Move

In calling in the leaders of both the major political parties and getting their approval beforehand, President Hoover acted in a statesmanlike way in putting forward his proposal for a one year suspension of payment of principal and interest on war debts.

It seems to be the belief of the men who know most about such things that this will bring about an immediate improvement in business conditions all over the world. President Hoover's justification is, of course. that it will benefit the United States of America. We are not in the business of doing things because they will benefit some other country unless we get a corresponding benefit. But when men like Owen D. Young, the famous Democrat whose name is attached to the Young plan for German reparations, such men of big affairs as Charles G. Dawes and Andrew Mellon on the Republican side, and statesmen on the order of Newton Baker and Carter Glass on the Democratic side, all agree that to ease up the economic pressure on Germany will result in improved business in America, we, naturally, have to agree with them. They know a great deal more about it than we do.

We do not understand that anyone expects an instantaneous return, or a return in a single year, to the high point of prosperity which we reached in 1928. But already the financial and business world is demonstrating its confidence that the upswing has begun, and the outlook for the coming year seems distinctly brighter than it did a month ago.

After all, it is only good business to give a debtor easy terms if he cannot meet the terms agreed on. That is true as between nations, as it is between individuals. Everybody who owes more money than he can immediately pay has found his creditors generally willing to take what he could give them, rather than to apply undue pressure. It is only fair to Germany to give that Republic the same kind of chance to catch up that, private business interests grant to their customers who may be in difficulties.

Sticking To Business

One of the lessons which business men have learned as a result of the experience of the past two year is that no business will run itself. We think Henry Ford was about right when he said the other day that one of the principal causes of the business slump was that too many business men made speculating their business and left the management of their real businesses to their employees.

We have never seen a business yet that would run for any considerable length of time without the personal attention of the man or men whose money is invested in it. The boss can take a vacation for a while, when things are running smoothly, and his business will go ahead on momentum till competition gets too strong, or collections begin to fall off. But whether it is a big automobile business like Henry Ford's, or an ordinary country store, the only person who can make the decisions which have to be made in a crisis is the boss himself. If he leaves that function to others he is heading for trouble.

We know of many business men who thought that because they had got a business well established and earning a good income they could treat it as a gold mine, continuing to take money out without putting any effort or thought in. We know a man who tried to run a newspaper that way once. He is not in the newspaper business any more.

The only people who have any right to speculate, as we see it, are the ones upon whose intelligence and business experience nobody is dependent. A man who hasn't anything to lose can afford to take a chance. The man who has retired from business and is living on the income of his invested capital can do as he pleases with it. But the man who is responsible for running a business upon which the prosperity of his community depends has no more right to divert his energies into speculative channels than has the head of a bank to use the depositor's money to gamble with.

Highways And Motor Vehicles

Slowly but surely we are making progress in the effort to find the best answer to all the questions which the automobile and the paved road have created. Just a few items from the week's news:

West Virginia has a new traffic law, effective the last of May, which makes it unlawful for anybody to drive so slowly as to impede or block the normal movement of traffic. The top speed limit, where conditions make it reasonable and prudent, is increased to 45 miles an hour. Slowly legislators are learning that it is carelessness, not speed, which is dangerous.

Two of the big oil companies have notified the French authorities that they will discontinue roadside posters. Here's hoping they follow the same practice in America.

The American Road Builders' Association reports that the value of highways and motor vehicles in the United States is now around thirty billion dollars. We spend, as a people, eight billion dollars a year for the operation and upkeep of cars, an average of $300 a year for each of the 27,000,000 autos. We buy 14,000,000,000 gallons of "gas" and pay in gasoline taxes and registration fees about eight hundred million dollars. Outside of that, the cost of maintaining improved highways is about $200,000,000 to the taxpayers at large. But everybody benefits by good roads and motor transportation, whether he runs a car or not.

"ROUND TOWN"

---by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

Fools rush in where columnists fear to write about."

* * * *

As a matter of fact, I have found it is somewhat difficult to please everybody in this column. Some didn't like my personal stories, while others wondered and asked why I didn't write some more of them, saying they liked it. I suppose that is the reason why some people buy the Literary Digest, and others buy True Confessions. Maybe if I write a little about several things I'd come darn near pleasing the whole bunch, and then maybe a statue would be erected to my name for being one person who pleased everybody, or something.

* * * *

Many thanks, and much obliged, Mrs. S., for the letter you sent in the past week. The ed handed it to me, and I appreciate it. I'm already looking forward to that invitation, and feel better already, because I have an idea that I'm going to enjoy myself at your place, with all the flowers, scenery and other things that go to make life pleasant, especially for columnists.

* * * *

Barnyard golf. Now ain't that something before breakfast for you. A person with a good imagination could possibly make lots of things from that term.

It occurred to me not so long ago that Clanton ought to become noted and famous about something. Of course I know I'm making my home here a great part of the time, and that that adds some distinction to the town, and even the county, but I mean something different. Now suppose Clanton should become famous for its pickles. We don't have any pickles, but maybe we could. Pickels are sometimes made from cucumbers, pigs feet, beets, and peaches, and pears, watermelon rinds, but most pickles are made from cucumbers. The cucumber, when ate green, will cause other things to occur to a person's anatomy, other than making pickles. In fact I don't believe they will make pickles when ate while green, as the b. a. is the inevitable result.

We folks who live in Clanton could put the pickle industry over the top, I believe. We could write about pickles, talk about pickels, sing about pickles, and eat pickles. We would eventually be known from coast to coast as the Pickle Town, and when a person wanted some good pickles, they would come to Clanton or send for them, or something. Then we could start making pickle ice cream, or originate a Pickle Punch drink, the kind with the pre-Volstead effect, and the Prohibition punch. We could give pickles as souvenirs to tourists, and if necessary, serve them green and the tourist would not forget Clanton, but that wouldn't be so nice. We'll forget that thought. Clanton Pickles, if laid end to end would reach around the world forty-two times. That wouldn't be a bad advertisement. Then we might add that although they are not placed end to end, nor are they grown that way, however they do go around the world. Pickle Punching Papas would also be in style. We could call our big growers that name.

Then again Clanton might become famous by the manufacture of shoe strings. We could make shoe strings from cotton, and place them on the market. By using a bit of stick mucilage on them, we could advertise them as "The shoe string that doesn't come untied." Shoe strings are a most important item in a person's dress. If a shoe string breaks, then the person is put to a lot of trouble, and sometimes is embarassed. There is many a slip to occur in regard to a shoe string. The shoe strings that are manufactured nowadays are subject to wearing out. Now we might be able to get the Government to appropriate several thousands of dollars for the research work, into finding out why shoe strings break. The investigation would of course have to go into finding out whether it is the stuff the string is made from, whether the eyelet in the shoe causes it, whether the dye in the string is detrimental, whether the eyelets are not placed properly in the shoe, whether the enamel on the eyelets is bad on shoe strings, whether the shoe strings wear out in black shoes first, or in tan shoes, or oxfords or high tops. Then maybe it is the pull given the shoe string when lacing the shoe. Maybe it is the weather.

By investigating the eyelet, we would have to have a chemical analysis of the metal, and also the enamel on the eyelet, and perhaps try different kinds of metal and enamel. Then in looking into the dye on the string, that would call for a chemical analysis and quite a bit of research work, as some of the dye used may come from a foreign country. We'd have representatives visit these foreign countries to see about that. We would have to have several persons employed. tying and untying their shoe strings to determine how long it took a shoe string to wear out, and count the number of times they tied their shoes. Some would have to wear black shoes, some tan, some oxfords and some high tops.

Oh, well, I don't much believe we'd better go into the shoe string industry, and maybe we'd better just let that alone. It gets more complicated than ever, the farther I go with it.

THEN WHAT HAPPENED?

Lem Jinks patronized a physician
Who'd studied in Austria and France;
He diagnosed Lemuel's condition
As acute St. Vitus'es dance
Mixed up with gall stones and hay fever,
Sciatica, lumbago and gout,
And the doc plied his trade with a cutlass and spade,
And counted Lem's dough with a pout.

Lemuel paid into medical coffers
All his kopeks, both silver and gold,
And despite the jeerings of scoffers,
He trekked back to his hometown of old.
He looked up the dour fam'ly doctor
Who'd helped him to make his debut,
And remarked, "Here I am. Do your worst, Doctor Sam, You're a hick, but what can you do?"

The old doctor glared at his victim
And fed him some ropey, black goo,
And, issuing a rapid, stern dictum,
He left him to carry it through;
Then wandered all over the County
Curing this, mending that, with a pill,
And Lem, on his own, couldn't get up a groan,

—THE MAD HATTER.

No Tree or Fence in Sight— —— By Albert T. Reid

TODAY AND TOMORROW

BY FRANK PARKER STOCKBRIDGE

ANTIQUES—

The craze for "antiques" has reached the point where almost any piece of furniture that was made before 1890 can be sold at a fancy price to somebody. There are not enough "colonial" pieces to go around, so the latest craze is for "Victorian" antiques.

In a New England antique shop the other day I saw kerosene lamps, china dogs, walnut "what-nots" and haircloth-covered chairs and sofas, which might have come out of my grandmother's parlor, marked at fancy prices as "antiques.' Alongside of them were a leather-seated cobbler's bench, a home-made bootjack and a high-wheel bicycle.

"We'll sell them all," said the dealer, confidently. "Most people haven't any taste. They'll buy anything that looks old."

It is a widespread belief that Americans generally read nothing but fiction.

As this is written, the most popular book in America is "The Education of a Princess," written by the former Grand Duchess Marie of Russia. The Grand Duchess, reared as a member of the imperial family of the Czar, married a Swedish prince from whom she was later divorced, and came to America to earn her living. She got employment in a fashionable dress establishment in Fifth Avenue, and wrote the story of her life, which reveals the inner workings of the Czar's regime, at the suggestion of friends. never dreaming that it would sell so many copies as to make her rich.

Actual personal experiences, if well told, are far more interesting than the best fiction. The trouble is that few persons who have had interesting experiences can tell them interestingly.

The nearest approach to flying the way a bird does is the glider plane, which is an airplane of special design without any engine. Once it gets off the ground it navigates on the air currents-just the way the big soaring birds do, without moving their wings.

A Canadian, Lieut. Lisant Beardmore, was the first to fly across the English Channel in a glider, a few days ago. A German experimenter recently covered 162 miles in a single glider flight.

There is no likelihood of the glider displacing the engined plane, but every flight made in one increases airmen's knowledge of air conditions and navigation and so tends to make flying safer.

MOVIES—

The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., which is the organization of which Mr. Will H. Hays is president, takes exception to my statement in this column recently that "Two-Gun" Crowley admitted that he got the idea of being a "bad man" from the movies.

Whether he did or not, however, does not seem to me to effect my contention that children and persons of immature minds who see crime and criminals exploited in the films are much more seriously affected than they can possibly be from reading crime news in the newspapers. For one thing the immature do not read newspapers outside of the big cities, whereas they go to the movies everywhere.

I have no animus against Mr. Hays or the motion picture industry as such, but I do maintain that in presenting life as it is not in the films the movie magnates give youth a distorted impression of values and do immeasurable harm.

The world is moving at a faster pace than ever before. A few years ago thirty-five miles an hour was considered high speed for automobiles. Four-wheel brakes and smooth roads make 75 miles a safe speed today and many cars can do 100 miles an hour or better.

The other day the fastest speed ever made on rails was achieved by the new German air-propelled "rail Zeppelin." Driven by gasoline motors which whirl an air propeller, the car made the 173 miles from Hamburg to Berlin at an average speed of 106 miles an hour, and for one stretch made over 143 miles an hour.

It is certain that travel at the rate of 100 miles an hour by any means of transportation will seem commonplace to the people of the next generation.

WHITE COLLAR JOBS

Boys should be taught to think less of fitting themselves for "white collar" jobs, says Prof. F. G. Nichols of Harvard, who points out the greater opportunities for promotion in industry than in clerical pursuits.

The young man who starts at the bottom in a factory often soon distances one who begins, say, as a bookkeeper. The idea is that while the clerk or bookkeeper may have a white collar job from the very first, the ambitious and intelligent industrial worker has a better chance to rise to an executive position, so that when he does reach the white collar job it means something worth while.

Advice along a similar line is given by President Thatcher of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, who defends vocational schools against the reproach sometimes leveled against them by the classical student. He says that "the idea is erroneous that vocational schools are undignified because they work with materials near at hand and not with a knowledge of things that are ancient and far off."

Literally, however, the proportion of white collar jobs is constantly increasing. With the continual advent of new machines for doing the "dirty work" of the world, the time may come when everyone may have a white collar job.

TOO MUCH MEDDLING

Thoughtful citizens, regardless of political affiliations, are beginning to sense the menace presented by the growth of government departments, bureaus, boards, commissions and other agencies for the regulation of every detail of our daily lives.

This menace is two-fold. It menaces our liberties and it menaces our material welfare through forcing us to support an army of useless officials. Every new law which is suggested by the professional reformer and busybody is designed to add to this army of political job holders. The burden is becoming intolerable.

This is particularly true in business and industrial life, in which the harassment of reputable citizens at the whims of politicians has about reached the limit of endurance. Speaking to the American Bar Association on this subject some time ago, Mr. Justice Sutherland of the United States Supreme Court said:

"Never before have the business activities of the people been so beset and bedeviled with vexatious statutes, prying commissions and governmental intermeddling."

Judge Johnson of Idaho observes that "the appetite for minding other people's business grows by what it feeds on, and the result is a swarm of agents, inspectors, detectives and nosey Meddling Matteis going about worrying and bulldozing the people."

Still the busybodies are clamoring for more laws, more bureaus and more investigations, because these mean more political job-holders to be supported at the expense of the taxpayers.

THOSE WILD STUDENTS

Although we do not hear so much about the wildness of youth, and particularly college youth, as we did a year or two ago, when it was the fashion to insist that the younger generation was going to the dogs, there are still many who look upon our young people with apprehension.

It may be in some small degree reassuring to these to know what some of our college students are really doing in the way of serious preparation for the duties and responsibilities of life.

It may be satisfying for them to know that one-third of the entire student body at Yale is either wholly or partly self-supporting, through earnings outside of school hours. During one year these earnings totalled $593,679.67, of which $350,856.17 were from work during the school term and $242,823.50 during the summer vacation.

Among the occupations which enabled these students to earn their way were those of artist's model, bookkeeper, caretaker, chauffeur, clerk, entertainer, gardner, guide, messenger, reader, tutor, translator, mechanic and others. Some acted as salesmen for various commodities, one having earned more than $4,000 during the year, another $3,000, four earned more than $2,000 each, 28 earned between $1,000 and $2,000, and 135 earned more than $500.

When such a large percentage of college students show the industry to make spare time earnings like these in addition to keeping up their exacting school work, it does not appear that modern youth is so frivolous, after all.

One particular reason for sing those of the new sect was that asserted that the body of Jesus been raised from death. This was sition that the Sadducees denied. was with real eagerness that the ducees saw to it that Peter and were put under guard for trial next day. These apostles had ght a miracle under the power of Holy Spirit in healing a cripple had asked alms from them as they going into the Temple area. Of se a crowd was attracted and Pet- sed the opportunity of preaching he people.

e Sanhedrin was summoned and healed man was present with at his silent testimony. The ques- was asked "By what power, or in name have ye done this?" Again r had a lead for further witness- concerning Jesus of Nazareth and active work of the Holy Spirit. climax of the message was in the statement about Jesus Christ: "And in none other is there salvation: for neither is there any other name under heaven, that is given among men, wherein we must be saved."

The Sanhedrin could not deny the fact of the healed man who was in their midst. Their sentence was that this kind of preaching must stop. Peter's bold answer to that injunction is given in the Golden Text: "We must obey God rather than men," Acts 5:29.

R. W. TAYLOR AND PARTY MAKE INTERESTING TRIP

A party composed of R. W. Taylor, of the Taylor Wholesale Grocery Co., of Clanton, Jimmy Reaves of Montgomery, M. H. Harper, Mayor of Geneva and Ira Henson of Meridian, Miss., left Clanton on June 18th for an extended motor trip into some of the Western States.

They went out of Alabama through Athens and into Tennessee by Pulaski, then on to Whiteville, and Memphis. They drove into the State of Arkansas the following day at Wilson, Ark., and visited a flour mill there, as the trip was being made to visit wheat fields and flour mills of the West. The party arrived in Missouri the second day, late, and went on over the Ozark Mountains, on to Van Buren, Mo., where they visited the largest spring in the United States.

At Springfield, Mo., Mr. Taylor stated that they were able to purchase gasoline at six cents per gallon, and in some sections it sold as low as five cents per gallon. They also visited a large flour mill at Springfield. They then motored on to Cartridge, Mo., a city with a population of ten thousand, and then on to Joplin, Mo., another pretty city with a population of thirty thousand, where gasoline was selling at eight and three-quarters cent per gallon.

From there the party motored on into the State of Kansas, entering at Coffeeville, and on to Windfield, and Wellington, Kan., where they saw the first oil well seen on the trip, and then on to Wichita, where they remained for several hours. After leaving Wichita, they motored on to Whitewater, Kan., where they were shown through the large Whitewater Flour Mills, and later rode through the vast wheat fields, visiting Newton, Kan.

On Tuesday, June 23, the party, accompanied by some friends in Kansas, made another tour of wheat fields, by way of Hutchison, Kan., with a population of twenty-five thousand. From Whitewater they motored on to Ottawa, Florence, Peabody, and Cottonwood, and Emporia, the home of the large J. C. Penny Co. At Ottawa they visited another flour mill, and more wheat fields, and nursery farms. Later passing over the Kansas River, arriving in Kansas City, Mo., where they were entertained at the Grain Exchange. They were also shown thru the butchering department of Armour & Company, and later visited the largest grain elevator in the world, the property of the Santa Fe Railroad, with a capacity of ten million five hundred thousand bushels of wheat. Later they were driven through the city, and entertained by the manager of the M & O Railroad.

They visited Columbia, Mo., St. Louis where they spent some time, before leaving for Nashville, Tenn., passing through Delville, Ill., Freeburg, Ill., Carbondale, and Marion, Ill., where large peach and apple orchards were seen. Then on to the State of Kentucky, crossing the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers and on into Hopkinsville, Ky., and Springfield, Tenn.

The party left Nashville on June 30, passing through Franklin, Tenn., arriving back in Alabama at Athens, later arriving in Birmingham, and back at Clanton at seven-thirty that night.

INDEPENDENCE VOTED ON JULY 2, 1776

July 2, has been neglected as an anniversary date of importance by the American people; yet it is one of the most significant dates of our history. For it was on July 2, and not on July 4, 1776, that American independence was really voted by the Continental Congress then in session.

The United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission calls the attention of the Nation to this fact and suggests that, when the people throughout the land celebrate Independence Day in 1932, during the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington. July 2 as well as July 4, be recognized in the merry-making and thanksgiving which the anniversary of that great document brings forth.

The story of how independence was voted is here briefly told. Before 1775, independence was not thought of by most of the American leaders or by the American public at large. The colonists were interested in righting the wrongs inflicted by the British but not in breaking away completely from the mother country.

Several attempts at conciliation were made, all without result. But many of the colonists were still anxious to close the breach rather than widen it. As late as January, 1776, New York. New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Maryland instructed their members in Congress to vote against independence.

As the months went on, led by the more radical colonial statesmen, the demand for independence began to crystallize. Soon it became the goal. Complete independence from England was to be the reward for American sacrifices!

January 1776 brought to Congress news of the burning of Norfolk, Virginia, by the order of Lord Dunmore. About that time Thomas Paine's "Common Sense" stirred the Colonists to fever pitch. Also, reports reached Philadelphia in May that England was hiring Hessians to coerce the Colonies. There was also the stigma of being proclaimed "rebels" and treated as such. All these events and conditions had their effect in arousing public opinion to the point of demanding independence.

George Washington, at the head of the Continental forces, was urging the Colonies to declare independence. He thought that the time for parleying and compromises was past. Complete severance and independence from the mother country, he thought, would help bring the struggle to a successful end.

On June 7, 1776, Richard Henry Lee introduced in Congress three famous resolutions. The first of these declared the United Colonies free and independent States, one of the most momentous resolutions ever introduced in Congress.

Lee's resolution was tabled for the time being but Congress created a committee, with Thomas Jefferson at its head, to draw up a declaration of independence. Lee's resolution for independence was brought up in Congress for debate on July 1. On the next day, July 2, 1776, the vote was taken and it showed twelve states in favor of independence, New York not voting.

It was, therefore, on July 2, 1776 that independence was really declared Thomas Jefferson's declaration of independence was then taken up, and after several changes were made, the Declaration of Independence as we know it was adopted by Congress on July 4, 1776.

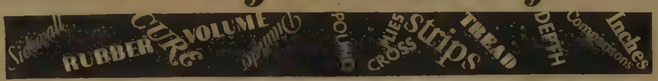
Let's cut through this welter of words



WHEN you set out to buy tires, don't you really want the most miles and the utmost in safety at the lowest possible price.

That being your objective, which tire should you buy?

If the experience of 20,000,000 motorists means anything, you should certainly buy Goodyears.

But if you try to puzzle through the welter of statistics on thicknesses, weights and diameters you lose the main issue and are as much at sea as ever.

The one and only reliable guide for you to follow is the seasoned preference of the public.

And that preference is overwhelmingly for Goodyear.

This fact expressed year after year by Goodyear's great leadership is concretely told again in the findings of an impartial investigation made by an unbiased dependable institution that asked 205,000 car owners this simple question:

QUESTION: "Regardless of price, convenience, etc., what make of tire do you consider the BEST tire made?"

There's the only buying guide that means anything to you car owners.

3 RULES

big help to BOWELS

What a joy to have the bowels move like clockwork, every day! It's easy, if you mind these simple rules of a famous old doctor:

1. Drink a big tumblerful of water before breakfast, and several times a day.
2. Get plenty of outdoor exercise without unduly fatiguing yourself.
3. Try for a bowel movement at exactly the same hour every day.

Everyone's bowels need help at times, but the thing to use is Dr. Caldwells' Syrup Pepsin. You'll get a thorough cleaning-out, and it won't leave your insides weak and watery. This family doctor's prescription is just fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin, and other helpful ingredients that couldn't hurt a child. But how it wakes up those lazy bowels! How good you feel with your system rid of all that poisonous waste matter.

They reported a lovely time, even of Mabel did fall down just as she reached the top of a steep mountain and rolled back to river, with the pot they fried fish in tumbling after her. Sound like "Jack and Jill" doesn't it? only Jill was the unfortunate one, although "Jack" did have to take the flash light and go hunt the pot. Nice wasn't it?

BUY HOME PRODUCTS

Campaigns having for their object the encouragement of buying products manufactured near at home have been carried on in various communities with varying success for many years. Nearly everyone agrees that the idea is sound in principle, but many fail to put it into practice when their time comes to buy.

Any small local industry which manufactures a worthy product and sells it at a reasonable price might be enabled to grow large through the loyal support of home people. Its growth would enable it to increase its payrolls, increase its consumption of locally produced raw materials, build up increased taxable wealth, and in every way contribute to the progress and prosperity of its community.

These are trite and self-evident facts which have been put forward time and again, and yet many otherwise good citizens deliberately contribute to the upbuilding of distant cities at the expense of their own towns and counties, through failing to patronize home industries and mercantile establishments.

The simple policy of buying at home would do more for the average town than can be accomplished by all the commercial organizations and boosters' clubs which may be maintained. These organizations are needed, of course, but their efforts should be aided by the all-important policy of supporting the enterprises already present in the community.

My Experiences in the WORLD WAR

By General John J. Pershing

Amused By U. S. Congressmen

While we were driving, King Albert related with much amusement some incidents of a recent visit by a party of our congressmen, and inquired whether it was customary in our country for them to be on familiar terms with the President. He said that some of them had called him Albert and one had slapped him on the back, saying: "King, you're the right sort of fellow and everybody in America admires you." I explained to him that our congressmen were more or less privileged characters at home and that they only meant to be friendly. As a matter of fact, I think their familiarity did not offend him at all.

During my brief visit I was particularly impressed by the extreme simplicity of the home life of the king and queen, living there, as they were, in a very modest country place within sound of the enemy's guns and almost within range! The queen often went into the trenches to cheer the troops, and the fine bearing of their majesties through it all made them the outstanding heroic figures of the World war.

CHAPTER XXV

Returning to my headquarters at Chaumont December 31, 1917, I was not surprised to receive the following cable from Secretary of War Baker, in view of the numerous suggestions that had come to me regarding various plans for training our troops with the French and British:

"Both English and French are pressing upon the President their desires to have your forces amalgamated with theirs by regiments and companies, and both express the belief in impending heavy drive by Germans somewhere along the lines of the western front. We do not desire loss of identity of our troops, but regard that as secondary to the meeting of any critical situation by the most helpful use possible of the troops at your command. The difficulty of course is to determine where the drive or drives of the enemy will take place; and in advance of some knowledge on that question any redistribution of your forces would be difficult.

"The President, however, desires you to have full authority to use the forces at your command as you deem wise in connection with the French and British commanders in chief. It is suggested for your consideration that possibly places might be selected for your forces nearer the junction of the British and French lines, which would enable you to throw strength in whichever direction seemed most necessary.

"This suggestion is not, however, pressed beyond whatever merit it has in your judgment, the President's sole purpose being to acquaint you with the representations made here and to authorize you to act with entire freedom to accomplish the main purposes in mind. It is hoped that complete unity and co-ordination of action can be secured in this matter by any conferences you may have with French and British commanders and line of action that may be agreed upon."

Bishop Charles E. Brent.

French Show Determination.

The following cable also was received from Washington, which showed the determination of the French to carry their point:

"The French ambassador called on the secretary of war today and read him a dispatch from M. Clemenceau to the effect that General Pershing and General Petain had conferred as to the wisdom of seasoning American troops by attaching their regimental units to the French division before committing a part of the line to an American division made up of troops not accustomed to actual front conditions.

"M. Clemenceau's cablegram stated that General Pershing had reported himself and General Petain in substantial agreement after conference on the subject, but General Petain conveyed to M. Clemenceau the opposite opinion. Apparently some misunderstanding has arisen which the secretary of war will be glad to have General Pershing endeavor to clear up by placing himself in communication with M. Clemenceau and reporting the result of the interview.

"The French urge action as outlined above as being safer for American troops than it would be to give them at once an independent place in the line, and urge very strongly that the secretary of war here accept their view and commend it to you. This the secretary of war is not willing to do, desiring to leave the matter wholly within your discretion after full consideration of the important elements of the matter."

Pershing Replies to Baker.

The following extract from my cable of January 8 conveys the main points of my reply:

". . . The French have not been entirely frank, as unofficial information indicates they really want to incorporate our regiments into their divisions for such service in the trenches as they desire. As to our instruction, a certain amount of work with French troops is beneficial, and this we are having and expect to have . . . Have expressed a willingness to aid in any way in an emergency, but do not think good reason exists for us to break up our divisions and scatter regiments for service among French and British, especially under the guise of instruction."

It thus appeared quite clear that the French were so intent on their plan that Premier Clemenceau presumed to cable Washington as to how our units were to be handled. Upon the receipt of the cable from Washington about the disagreement between Petain and myself I wrote at once to M. Clemenceau, quoting the cable and adding:

Field Kitchen of the A. E. F.

"May I not suggest to you, Mr. President, the inexpediency of communicating such matters to Washington by cable. These questions must all be settled here, eventually, on their merits, through friendly conference between General Petain and myself, and cables of this sort are very likely, I fear, to convey the impression of serious disagreement between us when such is not the case. . . ."

Clemenceau's Reply.

M. Clemenceau's reply, translated into English, follows:

"My Dear General: I hasten, without losing a moment, to reply to your letter dated January 5, 1918. I found myself in the position of cabling to the ambassador of France at Washington because the two contradictory responses which I had received from General Petain and from yourself, when you did me the honor of calling on me, obliged me, in the interests of the common cause, to seek an arbitration between the two commanders in chief.

"I need not conceal that I placed full confidence in the American government with regard to this. However, it was not to the American government that I addressed myself. I cabled to the ambassador of France, which was my right and my duty, in order to give him directions for the conversations which might take place either with the secretary of war or with the President of the United States.

"It might very well have happened that later on I should have addressed the American government, but I insist, on this point, that I have done nothing of the sort. I had not authorized the ambassador of France to read all or part of my dispatch to the secretary of war. I regret that he did so, but I do not disavow anything that I wrote.

"I am giving you here the explanation which I owe you and I am going to exercise all the patience of which I am capable in awaiting the good news that the American commander and the French commander have finally agreed on a question which may be vital to the outcome of the war."

Clemenceau's Motive Questioned.

As the French were dead set on getting our troops under their control it is more than probable that the French premier, feeling that their plans were not working out, sought to create some distrust in the minds of our administration at Washington against my management of things in order to pave the way for insisting that we were entirely wrong in not consenting to amalgamation. However, at later meetings with Clemenceau and Petain the alleged differences were seemingly settled amicably, as indicated in my cable of January 14, which follows:

"For chief of staff: Have now definite understanding with French satisfactory to them and to me that our divisions now in France shall complete their training as already begun. In the future divisions arriving in zone of French armies are to have period of training with French, each regiment in a French division. When sufficiently experienced by training in a quiet sector with French our divisions are to be united under their own commander and will be placed in the line in our own sector."

CHAPTER XXVI

The necessity for controlling the use of strong drink among our troops had been brought forcibly to my attention through the ease with which alcoholic beverages could be obtained.

The use of light wines as a part of the French ration was simply the continuance in the army of the universal custom of the people of having wine with their meals. The wines and beer were not so objectionable, but strong alcoholic spirits were regarded by the French themselves as dangerous and were prohibited for their troops, but the prohibition was not well enforced outside the zone of the armies.

The problem of preventing our troops from drinking the stronger liquors was difficult, especially at the ports of entry. Efforts to obtain enforcement through conferences with local authorities and through agreements with the port and district officials were made from time to time, but with little result.

I finally appealed to Prime Minister Clemenceau for support, but he would only counsel local officials, as he did not wish to declare a "state of siege" (martial law). In the end it was necessary to take the matter in our own hands and declare every bar and restaurant where the heavy liquor was sold as "off limits" for our troops. Our officers were directed to give their personal attention to the enforcement of this order.

Vice in Army Denied.

About this time a cable was received from Washington that some publication at home had made a sweeping charge of both immorality and drunkenness against our men. No such statement could be based on fact, nor could it serve any purpose except to cause unnecessary anxiety to parents and relatives and perhaps satisfy on the part of some one an unworthy desire for sensation. In reply I cabled in part as follows:

"There has never been a similar body of men to lead as clean lives as as our American soldiers in France. They have entered this war with the highest devotion to duty and with no other idea than to perform these duties in the most efficient manner possible.

"Engaged in healthy, interesting exercises in the open air, with simple diet, officers and men like trained athletes are ready for their task. Forbidden the use of strong drink and protected by stringent regulations against other evils and supported by their own moral courage, their good behavior is the subject of most favorable comment, especially by our allies. American mothers may rest assured that their sons are a credit to them and the nation."

Seek More Chaplains.

My diary notes the following:

> Paris, Thursday, Jan. 10, 1918. Have appointed Maj. Robert Bacon to be colonel and A. D. C. on my staff. Bishop Gwynne, deputy chaplain general, British army, and Bishop Brent were my guests at Chaumont on Monday.
> On Tuesday Brent and I discussed increase in number of chaplains, which we both favor.

Bishop Brent had been selected by me for appointment as chaplain with a view to his being the chief of the chaplain corps which it was planned to organize. The bishop did not approve of this idea and in deference to his opinion, and upon his suggestion, a permanent executive committee of chaplains was appointed to study the problems involved and make recommendations direct to me from time to time. Bishop Gwynne of the British forces explained their system, the methods of administration and the control and direction of chaplain's work, from which we adopted such features as were applicable to our service.

Custom in our army, arising from lack of appreciation of the usefulness of chaplains, had relegated them as a class to the status of handy men who were detailed to write up boards of survey or run libraries

Aviation Problem Serious.

Aviation questions demanded unremitting attention, for in no other service was unpreparedness so evident and so difficult to overcome. Apparently there was earnest effort at home, but it was too often misdirected.

On the part of the allies, especially the French, lack of mechanics and delay in procuring motors and material, such as spruce, had given them a setback. Due to these conditions and their own increased programs the French and also the Italians were unable to take more than a small proportion of our 1,500 flying cadets who were on the ground and who, under agreement, were to be instructed by them.

About this time the contract for planes we had made in August was formally abrogated, the French government being unable to meet its conditions due to the delay in receipt of machine tools and raw materials from the United States, a possibility which had been forecast in my cables to the War department. In its stead we later made an agreement whereby we should be dependent upon the allotment that might be made us according to the number of divisions we might have in France.

Early in December I signed an agreement with Lord Northcliffe of the British air board that we should send 15,000 enlisted men to England and maintain that number in training in their aircraft factories and air service stations. This plan proved to be beneficial to both sides, as far as carried out, but especially to ourselves in providing us with trained men and saving us the necessity of establishing extra schools for teaching them ourselves. Due to the nonshipment of air personnel from home we lacked 4,500 of reaching the number specified, and later the need for line troops prevented our completing the number.

Lord Northcliffe.

British Wanted U. S. Men.

When General Robertson came for the conference regarding the shipment of troops for training with the British as mentioned in my diary, we began to discuss the details of the disposition to be made of our forces which might be brought over in British shipping. It was found that General Robertson's proposal was practically the same as the one submitted to E. M. House through Mr. Lloyd George. He wanted to bring our infantry and machine-gun units by battalions only, and pointed out how much more expeditiously this would meet the shortage of men in the British army than to ship whole divisions with all their equipment and stores.

He believed that the British government would take the task of releasing temporarily some shipping engaged in carrying food and raw materials if America could see her way to provide the men, although, he said, it could not well undertake the transportation of complete divisions as not enough men would be brought over in this manner to justify the great risks involved. In other words, the British had the shipping to transport American battalions on condition that they would serve in the British armies.

However, as General Robertson's proposal would enable us to increase our strength more rapidly, my preliminary cable to Washington reporting the conference recommended that it be given consideration and, in view of our national attitude regarding service with another army, that if approved the plan should be regarded as a temporary measure to meet an emergency; that as soon as possible the remaining troops of our divisions thus temporarily broken up should be brought over and the units reassembled; that division, brigade and regimental commanders and their staff be sent with their infantry for training with the corresponding British units, and that the infantry be taken from those divisions that would not otherwise be transported until after June.

CHAPTER XXVII

Every one in authority realized that all resources the allies could muster would be required to meet successfully the great offensive of the central powers expected in the spring, but to use them effectively close co-operation among commanders would be imperative. With this in mind I proposed to Premier Clemenceau that the commanders in chief and chiefs of staff get together to examine the situation and, if possible, determine a general program of combined action.

M. Clemenceau at once approved the suggestion. It was also favorably received by General Foch, who, it will be recalled, was chief of the French general staff. I proposed that the meeting be held at my headquarters, but the French selected Compiegne, Petain's G. H. Q.

At the meeting, January 24, 1918, Robertson, for the British, spoke first, and suggested a general statement as to: (1) Mutual support between allied armies, (2) Situation as to reserves, (3) Question of troops in Italy, (4) Situation as to the transportation of the American army and facilities given it in France

David said, "I was glad when they said unto me lets go up into God's house." It looks strange that we should have to ask and beg people to attend church. That church to which you belong is your religious home, and why should you be urged to attend. I heard a church member, who attended his church, compaining because people did not notice him. Being a member of that church it was the duty of the man to be there to extend a welcome hand to others. If your church is not what you want it to be, it is up to you to get into the very heart of it and make it like it should be. When church members get themselves, "Glad" and not, "Mad" they will always be in their place.

Settlers of Thorsby Have Annual Picnic July 4th

stead of horse shoes, Nels would probably have made a ringer every time, as he is accustomed to seeing such articles, being at the depot the larger part of his life. Walter Parnell and J. O. Johnson tried out at the different stakes and if they hadn't partaken so freely of the picnic lunch, there is a possibility they would have come in line for the championship.

After several elimination games in which Mayor Peterson, Frank Nelson, Martin Nelson, Ernie (Jiggs) Hanson, Emil Borg, M. J. Soberg, Walter Parnell, Nels Peterson and Billy Smith took part, the championship of the day in horse shoe pitching, began to come to a finer point, games started taking on a tight score at the endings and ringers, leaners were more frequent.

Late in the afternoon coffee and cake, served by the ladies came in at a good time to appease the appetites of the horse shoe pitchers, and soon the games were resumed, lasting until almost dark, with each player in the lead (according to the opinion of each) so the champion will probably not be named until next July 4th, at which time it is hoped that all will be able to be present again, and continue the contest.

Among the out-of-town residents, who formerly lived in Thorsby, were Mrs. John F. Peterson, Mr. and Mrs. Carls Peterson, Miss Ruth Peterson of Birmingham, Miss Naemi Turnquist of Selma, Mrs. Mamie Smith and Billy Smith of Clanton.

Site Is Wanted For A $50,000 Fish Hatchery

the Hatchery is expanded. The supply of water must be adequate, clear, and of quality well suited for fish culture, and the site must be free from seasonal overflows. This suggests sites where the water can be supplied by springs or overflow wells if possible. The site must be easily accessible by rail and dirt road. You will understand how important this last item is since fish will be distributed in the Spring and Fall from the Hatchery by motor cars, as well as by rail.

"My suggestion is that it would be well for you to call a conference of representative citizens who are informed on matters of this kind, and submit through me at once to the Bureau of Fisheries such sites as you feel meet the requirements. It is very probable that the representative of the Bureau will start visiting the Counties offering promising sites on July 15th, and he 'phoned me yesterday that he would like to visit the Counties of my District first. I will ask that his visit be postponed until full information can be had, but you will recognize it is important that the matter be given immediate attention. Many counties in the State are offering sites."

If secured, this fish hatchery will mean quite a pull for Chilton County, and it is most important that those citizens who may have suggestions to offer, attend the meeting at the courthouse tomorrow afternoon at four o'clock.

Information Sent To Bureau Following Meeting Here Last Friday

Following a communication received last week from Congressman W. B. Oliver, to Judge L. H. Reynolds, stating that $50,000 will soon be available from the state for a fish hatchery to be located somewhere in the state, a meeting was called for last Friday afternoon to discuss the opportunity and to have citizens of the county to suggest sites where the hatchery might be located in the county.

It is understood that The Bureau of Fisheries specifies the need of 100 acres of land, where there is a suitable water supply for the hatchery, and that the contour of the land should be such that various pools could be added as needed.

Eleven sites were proposed at the meeting last Friday, which was attended by a large crowd of citizens from over the county. Those naming the sites were asked to write the Judge of

Vetch And Austrian Pea Planting Campaign Gaining Ground In Interest, Statements Show

M. T. Smith, Clanton, Route 3, has the following to say about vetch: "My cotton where I had vetch last year and followed with corn is the best cotton I have. The ground surely works good."

W. L. Popwell says: "I expect to plant at least 60 acres to vetch and peas this fall. I only bought three tons of soda this year and I want to buy less next year." Mr. Popwell joins Mr. Stapp and many others in the county in urging the farmers of Chilton County to grow their nitrogen this winter instead of paying high prices for it in sacks next spring. Mr. Popwell further states that, "I think I have the best corn I have ever seen in my life. It is on land where a good crop of vetch was turned this spring. No fertilizer was used."

R. J. Williams, Thorsby Route 1, has the following to say: "I have been sowing vetch seven or eight years and find that it is one crop that always pays me. My second crop of corn where vetch was turned last year, followed with corn, is almost as good with no nitrogen applied this year as it was last year. I expect to plant more vetch and peas this fall than I have ever planted."

A. N. Thrash, Jemison, Route 1, was in Mr. Stapp's office last Saturday making arrangements for vetch and peas. Mr. Thrash said that J. L. Wade, near him, certainly has some fine corn this year on land where a crop of vetch was turned last spring. Mr. Thrash, too, thinks farmers should grow their nitrogen.

Dr. P. T. Hinkle says, "Winter legume crops are certainly worthwhile. I have been growing crimson clover successfully for years. I believe I will make near 100 bushels of corn per acre this year on land where I turned under good crops of crimson clover this spring."

FARMS IN STATE SHOW INCREASE IN SIX YEARS

Federal Census Figures Show 19,765 More Farms in Alabama Since 1925

In 1930 there were 19,765 more farms in Alabama than in 1925 and the average number of acres in an Alabama farm had decreased from 70.4 acres in 1925 to 68.3 acres in 1930, according to the new federal census figures released by the Bureau of Census. In 1925 Alabama had 237,631 farms compared with 256,396 farms in 1930

The average value of farms shows decided change in the last 10 years The average Alabama farm in 1920 consisted of 76.4 acres and was valued at $2,123; in 1925 the average farm consisted of 70.4 acres and was valued at $1,746, and in 1930 the size of the average farm was 68.3 acres and its average value was $1,961.

"We are accustomed to think that our farming in Alabama is done largely by tenants," says Seth P. Storrs, commissioner of Agriculture, yet the federal census figures show the state's farm acres operated as follows: Owners 9,412,904; managers, 340,807; tenants, 7,826,097.

In 1920 there was a total acreage of all land in farms of 19,576,856. In 1925 this had dropped to 16,739,139, and in 1930 had again climbed to 17,579,808. It is informative to contrast these figures with the total value of all farm lands and buildings at the three periods. In 1920 the value was $543,657,755; in 1925 it was $414,858,647 and in 1930, $504,756,249.

COUNTY AGENTS TELL ABOUT FARM PROGRESS

Many good short stories of work being done for the advancement of agriculture in Alabama were found in the June reports of the county demonstration agents sent to District Agents J. T. High, R. G. Arnold and Emmett Sizemore at Auburn.

County Agent C. H. Bedingfield of Lee County told of work having been done preparatory to planting 100,000 pounds of Austrian peas on Lee County farms this fall. This is a big increase over 1930.

An enthusiastic report was made by J. D. Wood of Franklin County, who said thát the acreage planted this year to hay is 25 per cent greater than that of last year, 16 per cent increase in corn, and a 50 per cent increase in truck crops and gardens.

M. T. Gowder said that 7 purebred bulls of the shorthorn and polled Hereford breeds have been placed with farmers in seven different communities to improve beef cattle production in Jackson County.

Progress in commercial apple production in Walker County was reported by J. W. Sartain; while R. D. Winch mentioned success in raising sheep in Marengo County made special mention of the situation around Marion Junction. Fifty farmers in that section received from one company last year $160,000 for milk. Mr. Blake said that it is the most prosperous section of the county.

BROWNIE'S PLACE
Opening Day
Saturday July 18th

On next Saturday, July 18, I will open a new gasoline filling station 200 yards south of Upchurch Drug Store on the highway. I have built a side track and will install a large tank and buy gas by the car load. This will enable me to buy cheaper, and I am going to sell to you cheaper.

I ask those who buy gas to give me your patronage. I will handle the best grade anti-knock gasoline, and give my customers the very best courteous service. My opening day price will be 14 cents, and I will give one quart of the best heavy Texas oil free with each purchase of five gallons of gas on Next Saturday, July 18.

No doubt the big oil companies will cut their prices to meet my price, but just remember one thing, the big companies have been operating 20 years and they have not cut the price. The only place you can buy gas cheap is where you find independent gas companies.

I have gone to a very great expense in order to give you a good high grade gas at a much cheaper price. All I ask is an opportunity to serve you. You stick to me and I will stick to you.

O'ER THE COUNTY

By The Rambling Reporter

Over in the community where Clanton Route Four mail carrier goes, there are some fine families, as well as some fine homes. Turning off the paved Birmingham highway onto a good dirt road, I found Mrs. Maud Childress at the Plainview Farm fruit stand. Peaches and other fruits attract the motorist's eye here and this place has grown to be real popular and well known. With Mrs. Childress the other afternoon were two charming little girls, Miss Ruth Cox, and Miss Helen Kendrick, both of whom live nearby.

On out further is the home of Mr. and Mrs. O. B. Hay, who moved to this county not so long ago, to make their home.

Still further on is the home of Mrs. Oakley Vincent, who has two bright children, and a nice home place. Mr. and Mrs. Vincent moved to this county recently from Jefferson County. They expect to go on a fishing trip to Biloxi, right away.

One of the most progressive farmers living in that section, and on Route Four, is E. C. Cox. I drove up to his home in the afternoon, and found a large, two-story, 7-room house, well built, and attractively furnished. Mr. and Mrs. Cox have two charming daughters, Ruth and Inez. Mr. Cox has 77 acres of land under cultivation, and does quite a bit of truck farming. He was one of those fellows in the county who came out in front this year in strawberry growing, having sold something like $1100 worth. He has a nice peach orchard, plenty of grapes. He was high in his praise of the value of planting vetch or Austrian peas as cover crops, and says he is going to plant them again this year. Mr. Cox has three fine cows, supplying his family and two others with milk and butter the year round. His chickens keep the family supplied with eggs, and gives enough for market at times. He owns his home and land, and a trip over his property would show a person that Mr. Cox is truly a modern, progressive farmer and still a young man.

Came to a house where some men were busy cleaning out a well. One was down in the well, while the other was drawing out the sand and rocks. The man who was so industriously engaged down at the bottom of the well was B. James, who also lives out on Route Four. He has a nice little home place, where he, Mrs. James and their little daughter live.

J. R. Blow was the man who was helping Mr. James clean the well, and lived in a nice home just beyond the home of Mr. James. Mr. Blow is another farmer, and has three children, Cecil, Oscar and Loris.

The family of Tap Scott has recently moved to this county and settled in that community near Thorsby. Mr. and Mrs. Scott and their children, Lucy, Grady and Eleta Mae, came from Decatur last December. They have a nice little home on top of a hill, and are showing some real farming spirit.

Somewhat further on the same road is the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. K. Riggins. This is another nice home and shows that Mr. and Mrs. Riggins are another family of industrious people.

G. E. Brown has rather a fine farm home, further north on the same road I've been on, where I found these other homes, out on Clanton Route Four. A look around the premises of Mr. Brown's place shows a spirit of progressiveness. Miss Mary Brown is there too.

Around about two curves and over three little hills is the little home and farm of Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Barrett and three children, Julius, Willadean and Ethel. Mr. Barrett gives a person the impression of a young progressive-spirited farmer. I found him busy in his barn and lot the other day. He farms 22 acres, has his own cow, chickens, and other things that are needed by a farmer.

Drove on up to the large and attractive home of Mr. and Mrs. Sam P. Collins, up in the Collins Chapel community, and on Clanton Route Four. Mr. Collins was busy out at his barn, so I found Mrs. Collins a real interesting lady to talk to until I could see Mr. Collins also. Mr. Collins has forty acres of land under cultivation. His home and yards show that someone there is certainly industrious and progressive. They have practically everything needed around to make a happy farm home. They have two children, Miss Giula Collins, and a son who holds a responsible job in Birmingham as a mechanic.

Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Gentry live up in that same community and have a nice little home, and five children, Charlie, Louise, Estelle, James, and Claud Paul. Mr. Gentry farms about thirty-five acres of land and is expecting a good crop this year.

Melvis Collins has a nice home further on the same road, where he and his brother and mother live. Mrs. Collins is one of the pioneers of that section and a very interesting lady.

Drove up to the home of J. C. Connell, and found him with a leg all bandaged up. Mr. Connell had the misfortune of breaking his leg, but I'm glad to say that he is getting along much better now. Mr. Connell has a nice farm home, and a real industrious wife and four children, Effie Lee, Ernest, Alice and Crit.

A visit to the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Allen is a visit to a home that is happy, and shows that the owner is wide-awake and a most progressive farmer. This is on Jemison, Route One. Living with Mr. and Mrs. Allen are his sister, Miss Barbara Allen, and his mother, Mrs. Penney Allen. Mr. Allen profitably cultivates approximately 70 acres of land, and says he is a firm believer in the value of planting vetch and Austrian peas as winter cover crops. He has a fine field of corn now where he planted vetch last year, and he says he is going to plant more vetch this year.

Next week, I'll probably take you readers to another part of the county and tell you about the people I find there.

"Inauguration on an experimental basis of a new interstate telegraph service, conceived and developed by Western Union, and to be known as the serial day letter was announced today by the Western Union Telegraph Company. This establishes a new telegraph service the first since the advance of the night letter in 1910 and the day letter in 1911. The serial day letter is suited to the use of any firm or individual having occasion to carry on intermittent communication with any one addressee during the course of a day. It may be compared with the "running story" written by a newspaperman on the scene and during the progress of a news event and sent to his newspaper in short "adds," or sections of a paragraph or more at a time. Substantial savings are made available by this service. By using it a firm can increase its volume of telegraphing substantially at a slight increase in cost. The new telegram may be filed in sections during the day for transmission, as the name indicates, and the number of words which may be sent in one serial day letter is unlimited. The minimum charge per day is for 50 words and individual sections are rated at a minimum of 15 words."

Mrs. Anna Fry of Chicago asked the judge to have her brother put in jail, explaining that he had killed 30 of her chickens and 11 of her rabbits after an argument with her.

The only assets scheduled by Henry Moore of Chicago in his bankruptcy case consisted of a set of golf clubs.

The National Industrial Conference Botrd of New York says that the cost of living for the average wage earner is now lower than at any time in the past 12 years and is still going down. A survey report shows that in 1930, as a whole the cost of living averaged 3.8 per cent lower than in 1929, and 4.2 per cent lower than in 1928.

How to train BABY'S
BOWELS

Babies, bottle-fed or breast-fed, with any tendency to be constipated, would thrive if they received daily, half a teaspoonful of this old family doctor's prescription for the bowels.

That is one sure way to train any bowels to healthy regularity. To avoid the fretfulness, vomiting, crying, failure to gain, and other ills of constipated babies.

Dr. Caldwells' Syrup Pepsin is good for any baby. For this, you have the word of a famous doctor. Forty-seven years of practice taught him just what babies need to keep their little bowels active, regular; keep little bodies plump and healthy. For Dr. Caldwell specialized in the treatment of women and little ones. He attended over 3500 births without loss of one mother or baby.

SOCIAL SERVICE IN THE EARLY CHURCH

Acts 4:32-35; 6:1-4;
II Corinthians 9:1-7

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D.D.

Christianity is far more than an ideal. Its principles can be put into practice. Calvin Coolidge recently said in one of his daily messages: "It would be difficult to find anywhere on earth a human being whose life has not been modified in some degree by the influence of the Christian religion." Thought of others rather than of self is basic. This began with the Founder and every true follower has the same idea.

Today the world still needs the fullest expression of Christian socialism. As people had need in the Jerusalem congregation, provision was made by turning into a common fund whatever could be spared. Many quarrels resulted over the distribution of money. When the apostles faced the situation they realized that their work of preaching was so great that they could not also give adequate attention to the physical needs of the growing Christian community. Then the office of deacon was inaugurated and seven were chosen to undertake this special type of service. This office of deacon persists in the church of today and a long line of men and women have thus very honorably served the Lord in helping the poor.

Later the gathering of the poor fund was an extensive enterprise. The Council of Jerusalem decreed that Paul, and the other apostles to the nations, should seek funds for the poor in Jerusalem when they ministered abroad. The church in Corinth was held up as an example to the friends in Macedonia quite as we are urged today to measure up to the gift made by another. Thus what are called modern financial pressure methods in raising money seem to be rather old.

Why More Accidents?

Persons identified with the street and highway safety movement are at times puzzled to know why it is that despite the large number of organizations and individuals engaged in safety education of the public, the number of automobile accidents continues to increase.

The Silvertown Safety League which was organized to play a part in the movement to reduce the number of motor vehicle accidents by getting motorists to think about safety, by getting them to sign pledges to observe nine good rules for safe driving, has not only been studying effective means of reducing accidents, but also safety education methods.

The United States Government through the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety, State governments through offices of state motor vehicle commissioners, city governments through local chiefs of police and traffic commissioners, the automobile manufacturers through the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, car owners through the American Automobile Association, the insurance companies, the National Safety Council—the list could be continued almost indefinitely—are all engaged in safety education. And yet the number of automobile accidents increases.

Are You Prepared?

How would you fight a sudden fire in your home? This is a question that every man, woman and child should be prepared to answer. Year by year as our population increases the toll paid to this evil enemy of mankind grows greater and greater.

Five hundred million dollars a year is the staggering levy exacted by the fire demon, but even this huge sum cannot compensate the victims for their grief and discouragement as they suffer the loss of loved ones and see possessions that can not be bought with money ruthlessly consumed by the flames.

The knowledge that so much of this loss is preventable does not make it any less bitter. When a fire starts it is an infant, but a few seconds later it may be a roaring monster that overwhelms the puny efforts of unaided human hands.

Preparedness is half the battle. The water bucket and hose are effective if they are immediately available, but often the very incident that started the fire may have rendered the water supply unavailable.

Every house, every barn and every apartment in the land should be protected with the simple, inexpensive and efficient hand fire extinguishers that are now available. With them it does not matter if the flames are caused by burning gasoline or other material, because they smother the oxygen supply necessary for the maintenance of the fire. Water may spread such a fire.

Every householder owes it to his family to equip the home with hand fire extinguishers, as many of them as are needed. They should be kept where they can be reached quickly. Everyone in the house should know where they are. You may well thank your heavenly stars some day that you were thus prepared.

Better Be Safe Than Sorry

The drowning season is now in full swing. From now until school begins again thousands of boys—girls, too, these days—will take unnecessary chances in the water and lose their lives in consequence. That has always been true, and it will always be true. Youth will always take chances, and never listen to advice.

Nevertheless, we offer some advice to those who would go swimming.

Don't stay in too long. Half an hour is enough at a stretch.

Don't go into the water immediately after a heavy meal.

Don't keep on swimming after you are tired.

Never go swimming alone.

Don't try to "find bottom."

Don't get into a canoe unless you can swim.

Most of the drowning accidents come from disregard of those simple precautions. If everybody would follow them there would be fewer young lives lost.

Dimming Lights

It ought to be a fine of one hundred dollars for the first offense and double it for each subsequent violation for the automobile driver who refuses to dim his lights at night when signaled by the other driver to dim. When an automobile signals for the dimmers at night it is conclusive proof that he is in trouble or fears trouble and the driver who will not recognize this, violates the cardinal courtesy of road driving.

It is no trouble or expense to dim your lights. It requires but little effort on the part of the driver to switch to the dimmer. It means much to the other fellow at times. It keeps him out of the ditch. It gives him a view of the road ahead. It is playing him a fifty-fifty courtesy. But regardless of its importance just count the number that will dim for you at night and you will become convinced that until people do learn the courtesy and recognizes it, you should have left your car in the garage or make up your mind to take a chance.—Covington News.

"ROUND TOWN"

---by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

> "The Moving Finger writes, and having writ, moves on. Nor all thy piety nor wit shall lure it back to cancel half a line, nor all thy tears wash out a word of it."

This week I might take up for discussion, the action of the Commissioners Court in doing away with the County Welfare Department of this county, and with words that would touch the heart of the most hard-hearted person, show where there are children starving, going almost naked, and where women are needing help with babies, poor little undernourished babies, and where when the winter months set in this year, there will be little babies improperly clothed to withstand the cold, but the Commissioners were elected by the people, to serve the people, and so all I could do would not make them change their ruling, and I guess the little babies will be little babies until they grow up, and they may get cold this winter, and need attention that their parents can't give them and we won't have no kind-hearted lady to visit the families and advise the mothers, because the county no doubt needs that sixty-dollars per month, or whatever it is they have been paying a Welfare Superintendent.

Now I see one of my suggestions, or dreams about to get some attention, thanks to the Kiwanis Club of Clanton. Sometime ago I wrote about Maplesville, and how much I thought they needed a shipping point for strawberries, and how I thought the farmers in that section ought to be raising more strawberries. Now the Kiwanis Club will be over in Maplesville tonight, meeting, eating and talking with farmers and business men over there, about that very thing, and I wish them all the good luck possible.

Maplesville is a good town. With something like twenty or more business houses, a bank, and mills and gins, and it's one of Chilton County's towns, too. There are two railroads that go through there, and the road from Clanton to Maplesville is in splendid condition, just a short drive. I hope that Clanton and Maplesville can get together better than they have in the past.

"He drew a circle that shut me out,
Heretic rebel, a thing to flout;
But Love and I had the wit to win,
We drew a circle that took him in."

* * * *

Excuse me for getting away from Clanton for a topic or two, but that topic is something worthwhile and I know it, don't you?

I note on the front page of C. G. N. this week that we have a new representative in Thorsby this week, and I hereby, therefore and whereas, extend my hand of welcome to Miss Edith Johnson of Thorsby, into the fine family of correspondents of C. G. N. I might also take it upon myself to congratulate the ed on securing this charming little lady as a Thorsby representative. Of course he don't know much about things like that, but I can tell him he displayed some real taste, not only in personality, but in competency and reliability. Miss Johnson is a member of one of those families to whom a good deal of credit is due for the settling of the Town of Thorsby many years ago. The News has several attractive young ladies as correspondents and representatives in various sections of the county, and I been trying to get the ed to give me a job of calling on them all, now and then—mostly now.

* * * *

Last week "The Mad Hatter" made an appearance in this column, and I'm sorry I could not make due recognition at that time, and I hereby make said recognition, and request that "The Mad Hatter" come again with another one of those poems, phrases, ditties, or whatever it was. Anyway it was good, and by the way, Mad Hatter, why not slip me your address next time, and maybe I can give you something worthwhile, sometime. I like the slant of your pen, and the movements you make when you write. But I ain't such a good mindreader, so come across with the info, and some more contribs. You live up there where Maud Lynn has her domicile, or that is, in the same town, and I been harboring an idea for sometime that I'm gonna round up that illustrious group of contributors, such as yourself, Maud, Jane Anne, the Great Dooker Booker, Tee See Eye, and others, and we are gonna have a big party together.

* * * *

And you who signs "The Lone Watcher" don't need to worry about that item you mentioned in regard to those three young ladies. I been having my eye on them and at the same time have suggested to them that they get in touch with the Great Dooker Pooker, maybe he will be able to help solve their problem. And too, next time you phone me, don't get me so mixed up with several other fellows like you did.

* * * *

Lately I've been wondering if there were any R. B.'s doing anything 'round town. There is getting to be quite a bit of things which needs attention 'round these parts, and grandma is not so well either. Honi soit qui mal y pense.

* * * *

Several years ago, something like maybe eight or seven, the city officials oiled the streets in town that are now paved. That was a great help, and a fine step. Don't know what the cost would be, and I imagine it would take a lot of oil, but I'd like to see the city officials oil some streets in town this summer. The street that leads up in front of the Baptist church, to the corner; Main Street, or second avenue, down at least to the cemetery, and at least just beyond the stores at West End, and the old highway leading in front of the Methodist church at least two blocks. Oiled streets are worthwhile, not only during summer months, but also during winter. It prevents them from being dusty in summer and slippery during wet winter months. I kind of hope the city will be able to do this soon.

* * * *

It's funny to me that the proper authorities have not already done something about this mad dog business. I noticed in last week's C. G. N. that five people in the county were bitten by the animals, and that the man in the laboratory at Montgomery said it was all due to carelessness—but whose carelessness? We have no County Health Unit, so who is supposed to look after such cases, when, where and how?

THE CHILTON COUNTY ALMSHOUSE HEARING

By W. T. Hand, Jemison, Ala.

Not Inclined To Impose On The Press Or Apologize To Chilton County

Complaint against treatment of inmates of the Almshouse caused the Commissioners Court to order, on June 1st, 1931, "a hearing" on the premises set for June 16th, 1931, to interrogate inmates and the Keeper and investigate all conditions impartially, inviting other evidence.

In a statement published June 25th, 1931, signed by L. H. Reynolds, Judge of Probate, J. E. Cobb, J. M. Mims, J. L. Burdett, A. P. Vinson, Commissioners, the following decision is noted: "and the court concluded that the charges were frivolous and the result of prejudice of certain parties against the Keeper, J. D. Bean."

A Few Extracts From Press Testimony

Inmate Shaver: "They didn't get enough to eat."

Inmate Teel: "For dinner we have Irish potatoes, cabbage or beans, cornbread and a glass of water if we want it. For supper we have cornbread and buttermilk and if there were any cold vegetables left over from dinner we have that and rice."

Inmate Allen: "It is enough food, owing to how hungry a fellow is."

Inmate Alice Newton: "He came into my room and beat me with a stick and he said, 'I'll beat hell out of you' He beat me around in the room and I decided he meant to kill me and stayed away for a couple of nights, my mind wasn't good, I hadn't done a thing in the world. I have seen Gip run in his room and said, "Lord, have mercy," and Mr. Bean was right behind him."

A Near Resident: "I saw Loyd Bean knock Gip down three times; inmates come to my house and say they are starving to death."

A Near Resident: "He saw J. D. Bean whip Gip."

Bill Lawson, a negro: "Mr. Bean got me to help bury one of the women of the Poorhouse and I really in a way thought it my duty and since that they replied to me it was against the administration of a negro to help bury a white lady and I toted the back end of the corpse."

Percy Pitts, Counsel for Keeper Bean, and Omar Reynolds, for the court, were present and there in the Keepers presence, so I am informed, Mr. Pitts was persistent in objecting to certain testimony the inmate tried to disclose and no attorney to aid them. Unwilling to suspend or modify in this case the practice of extracting the refined essence of pertinent testimony customary in conflicts of the free and the rich, seemingly this relentless fellow was willing to further humiliate these defenseless old people in their humble state, Mr. Pitts instructing the court stenographer to take down only such testimony as he directed.

It seems that my absence reflected profit for the defense, notwithstanding my prior notice that I would make no complaint against the management from June 1st to 16th, which period was the basis for the hearing. I am glad I was not present, a visionary picture of the exhibition is sufficient for me.

It appears that the testimony of some were not shown in Press reports others seem to vary. For instance, Ollie Brewer; Press quotes: "Told he saw one of the inmates at a funeral once and that the latter was dressed in poor clothing." I am informed that he swore, "I saw Gip McQueen at New Salem church at the funeral of Mr. Petty and he had on overalls that come just below his knees, with holes in them, and shoes wired on his feet."

Gilbert Kendrick, a negro who lives about 2½ miles distant, swore that an inmate made visits to his home and asked for food, so I am informed.

An affidavit by a woman past 82 (a former inmate, recently expelled) was delivered to Judge Reynolds, its contents being withheld.

Dr. Glenn Andrews, Prison Inspector, read his report of date June 8th, 1931, made to Governor Miller, eight days after the order for the hearing, even then numerous recommendations are made, such as: "several of the inmates are hospital cases requiring close attention; a practical nurse is to be placed in charge of the patients and rooms generally so soon as one that is competent can be had, so the Judge of Probate stated. An employed cook should also be in charge of the cooking. All the inmates should be required to bathe at regular intervals or as often as is necessary to keep them clean."

The patients should be restrained from going about the neighborhood. The Judge of Probate stated it was the purpose of the board to have the institution placed in a comfortable condition and to provide quarters for the negro patients as soon as the new building could be occupied. Dr. Andrews did not refer to the condition there as shown by affidavits of inmates, taken by his agents last December, even denying the writer the privilege of seeing them, after inviting him to Montgomery for that purpose, however, I had formerly seen copies of a number of them and in each case affiant swore "We do not get enough to eat." Comment is restrained.

In his letter to the court he stated: "Please note the recommendations as pointed out in the ~~report and institute~~ such measures as are necessary to carry them out." My latest inquiry fails to show that an employed cook has relieved Mrs. Shaver, about 76, cooking about eight years for inmates, or that a practical nurse has been employed, and if any other regulations have been carried out except revoking their freedom, I am not informed of it.

It will be a joyful day if soap and towels are provided and no doubt they will delight in bathing.

The writer endeavored to stop the practice of slavery and involuntary servitude enforced upon inmates, without success, and now with their liberty, as well as their sufferance rights, denied these bonds are tightened, notwithstanding our Federal and State Constitutions, recite that "no form of slavery or involuntary servitude shall exist."

Aside from the complaint in behalf of the living attention is invited to the testimony of the negro, Bill Lawson, who was a pall-bearer at a funeral, termed "frivolous charges" by the court, which only goes to show the estimate and little regard held by the administration in Chilton County for this high calling.

Considering their verdict of "fri lous charges" the average mind comes stupefied and perception understanding is made blunt at any tempt to alleviate this irreco ila spectacle.

The same negro stated, not as e dence, that when the inmate, Mrs M tle Lawrence, about 35, died about J 1st, 1931, he "laid her in the coff with assistance, altho Dr. Wood the dead were turned over to the dertaker and Judge Reynolds di know how long it had been the tom.

My record shows "she washed Mr. Bean's family and all inmates cept about five, and other work, ing, making beds, cleaning house though both arms had been paraly Worked longer than able; mind ered said "Prayed all night last ni going to pray all night to-night; working."

"The dope was put in her arm long time, could not be woke up, keeper nor any of his family pre when she died. Poor, dejected he sick slave, the Poorhouse had been abode for about 17 years." Her mo died before she entered and her fa several years ago.

Lack of proper regard for these fortunate castaways is apparent, signed to the work-house, called "Human Dumping Ground," shut from society, walks, and the cultiv portion of the community, deprive that fellowship and familiar interco without which life itself is but a dr existence. "The poor committeth self unto thee." Mild and brief comment concludes—Ill-treated in dishonored in death.

B. E. Warren, Editor of the Nashua (N. H.) Telegram, says:

"Free wheeling may be all right for automobiles and pleasure, but no business can be maintained at a successful pace with the advertising clutch disengaged.

"For more than thirty years in this community I have never known a firm to fail that had used newspaper advertising consistently and intelligently. I have noted many failures directly traceable to a business policy that excluded newspaper advertising.

"People read the home town newspaper both for the news and the advertising. Both must be interesting. The well balanced home town newspaper has been, and will continue to be, the most important development factor to the home town merchant.

"Fish are frequently caught by occasionally dragging a line through the water, but the best string invariably come to the lures of the consistent and persistent angler. By the same token, business success come more quickly and in larger volume to the merchant who adopts a liberal newspaper advertising policy, stocks the goods the public will buy and follows the golden rule of truth in advertising."

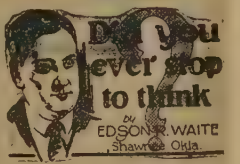
CLANTON BRINGS VICTORY IN FIRST BALL GAME OF SEASON

The Clanton baseball team started the season off in a splendid way when they brought defeat to the team of the Southern Shops, of Selma, last week by a score of five to three.

Baker for Clanton with four times at the bat brought in three hits, while Pratt Busby and Littlejohn came next in rank with two hits at five and four times at bat. Nivens, Taylor and Watkins each made one hit for Clanton. Runs for Clanton were made by Pratt Busby, Phillip Foshee, D. Baker, T. Littlejohn, and Watkins.

For Selma. E. Phillips and Burtley each made two hits from four times at bat.

Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Green of Montgomery were the week end guests of Mr. and Mrs. O. W. DeLoach of Clanton.



C. G. Roseberry, editor of The Shawnee (Okla.,) Morning News, says:

"When you purchase the articles you need you not only receive the goods purchased but also you make it possible for someone to buy the merchandise you sell or to operate his business so as to give you employment.

"Our civilization is so complex that when any group of people quit buying the services and commodities they need, all business suffers. At times prices get so high a man may decide to wait awhile until they come down to the level he thinks they should reach. No one can object to that.

"However. at a time like this when everyone concedes that prices are very low—too low in fact, there is no excuse for a buyer's strike. In fact, under present conditions, it is one's duty to buy all the things he and his family needs and to anticipate some at least of his future wants. Thus will he do his part in giving momentum to our industrial machine.

"Merchants and manufacturers can assist the forward looking program by hard work and extensive advertising. There never was a time when advertising was a greater necessity than now. It does a double duty. Besides doing the job of selling the merchandise on hand, it creates confidence in the future good business of the country. Doing a thing when it is timely is sometimes as important as doing it at all."

"Buy now, and 'Advertise Now," are certainly appropriate and timely slogans."

CITY FRIGHT—

Everybody who visits New York is seized at some time or other with a sense of panic at its immensity, no matter how well travel seasoned they save become. Practically every noted foreigner, from Dr. Albert Einstein to the youngest British flapper, yields at some time or other to this feeling.

People in country towns who may have kept away from the city because of their innate fear of the town ought to cinquer this feeling and spend some time here. It is more than a liberal education.

No Real Danger—

Life here is as safe as in any spot on earth, in spite of the monsters that roar in the subways, clatter on the elevated railroads and screech on the streets. That noise is what saves lives, probably. At the same time it is nerve-shaking to the stranger, from its potential menace.

Being lost in this enormous city is no great shakes. All one has to do is step up to some one of its 19,000 policemen and let him straighten out your mental tangle. Years ago they earned the name of "The Finest" and there is no reason to think of them as otherwise, even in these days of newspaper exposes.

Auto Tourists—

Hardly an hour passes, day or night, that one cannot see an automobile carrying a load of farm folks out to see the sights of a great city, bowling along through the heart of Longacre Square—the focus of all this country's theatrical activities. Nothing is missing on most of these autos; the tent strapped on the running board; camp parahernalia piled in, rusty old baggage, and dad up front in his shirt sleeves calmly moseying along past the friendly traffic cops; and mother in calico getting an eyeful while soothing her unruly brood.

Everybody they stop to ask for directions takes pleasure in helping them along and, even if they don't stay long in the city but hike right out to some tourist camp, they get to see the greatest show on earth at a minimum of expense and effort. It's a good stunt for anybody in the country who is wondering where to go for a vacation.

Transportation—

No city in the whole world has as complex a system of street cars. It takes weeks before one learns just where they all go to, the problem being intensified by the subways, where one loses all sense of direction and can rely only upon the verbal directions given by the guards on the station platforms. And a lot of those fellows don't know any too much about the city.

On the Second Avenue Elevated Road the difficulties are added to by the type of trainmen employed. Most of them appear to have left Ireland only a few weeks before and their brogue is often too rich for an ordinary American to understand what they are trying to tell you. The man who hires for that road must be a full-fledged Irishman with an intense love for the the Ould Sod.

A Busy Spot—

Perhaps the busiest spot in the whole world, judging by the number of people who pass by it, is Greeley Square at Thirty-fourth street and Broadway. No fewer than seven double lines of rails cross the intersection. And they run on five different levels, three being underground, three on the street level and one on the Elevated track and besides them are many buses.

Within a block of the corner one may ride in the elevators of the Empire State Building for 102 floors above the street, besides going some six floor below, if one can get by the janitor. To those with a spark of adventure left, this city offers several weeks of gargeous exploration possibilities and will form an unforgettable experience.

Latchstring Always Out—

New York has an unwritten law to treat all visitors well. Local drivers are hauled off to court for any infraction of the law and dealt with summarily. But let your license plate bear a North Carolina, Ohio or Iowa license and all you get, unless you kill a pedestrian, is a smiling order from the cop to "watch what you are doing!"

We know one man who moved here from Michigan three years ago who still carries an up-to-date Detroit license— just to get that extra touch of courtesy paid to visitors.

In protest against late "lighting up" hours, hundreds of residents made oil lamps out of jam jars and tied them to the city lamp posts in Sudbury, Eng.

HOT DOG VS. COLLEGE

George J. Deck of Buffalo was poor but ambitious when at the age of 18 he determined to have a college education. But hot dogs blocked his way.

Casting about for some means of earning his way through college, Deck tried running a hot dog stand and met success beyond his fondest expectations. Business was so good that he could not take time to go to school. Soon he opened additional stands, all of which prospered.

Recently he bought out six competitors and now has what virtually amounts to a "hot dog trust" in his home city, with a warehouse, a bakery, a butcher shop, a fleet of 12 trucks and 16 hot dog stands. His annual turnover is more than $500,000 and he draws from his business a salary equal to that of the President of the United States—$75,000 a year.

But it looks as if he will have to worry along without a college degree. Still he holds a very desirable, if not dignified, title. He is known as "the hot dog king."

Because the shoe fitted her, a woman accused of throwing it through a neighbor's window was fined 62 cents in court in Chicago.

A PREACHER'S FAREWELL

Probably it is an old story, but anyway it's full of logic. A preacher had been greatly discouraged and had sought a new field of labor. He happened to have a friend in the governor, to whom he appealed, and not in vain. He got a political job. In taking leave of his flock he said:

"Brothers and sisters, I must say good-bye.

"I don't think God loves you, because none of you ever die.

"I don't think you love each other, because none of you ever get married.

"I don't think you love me, because you have not paid my salary.

"Your donations are moldy fruit and wormy apples—and by their fruits ye shall know them.

"I am going to a better place. I am going to be chaplain of the penitentiary.

"Where I go ye can not yet come, but I go to prepare a place for you, and may the good Lord have mercy upon you. Good-bye."

How Decreased Railroad Earnings Affect You

Every reader of this newspaper is directly or indirectly concerned with the prosperous operation of American railroads as will be shown in this announcement. Read it carefully so that you may be impressed with the necessity for greater cooperation with the railroads and more equitable laws and regulations governing other forms of transportation.

At the close of last year 1,350,000 employes were in the service of the railroads, and this figure was over 400,000 less than five years before and fewer than at any time since 1909.

In the past five years this railroad has found it necessary, on account of competing forms of transportation and depressed business, to reduce its force by more than 18,700 employes—men and women who are capable, good citizens and assets to the community in which they live. Railroad employes are patrons of every line of business and professional activity.

Less patronage and lower earnings have forced the railroads to materially reduce their expenditures for fuel, products of iron and steel mills and various items of materials and supplies; numerous stations and ticket offices have been closed and many trains discontinued. These conditions have been observed and felt by almost everyone.

The Railroads Must Earn To Spend

¶ There is scarcely a family in all America that is not affected by railroad prosperity, or lack of it. This is evidenced by the widely-held securities, stocks and bonds, in the hands of the American people; all American institutions, financial, educational, etc., as well as forming the basis of many trust estates. Fourteen billion dollars worth of railroad bonds and ten billion dollars worth of railroad stocks are held by the public and these institutions.

It is to your interest, therefore, to assist the railroads in regaining their lost ground by patronizing them; and by helping them to solve the problems confronting them as the result of unjust and unfair competition with other forms of transportation operating for hire.

THE OLD RELIABLE L&N (LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R.R.)

The steam railroads built this nation. They saved it in time of war and they must continue to be the backbone of its transportation structure. This they cannot do without the active support of travelers and shippers and a fair field of competition.

D. W. Haskew

The "Hello Girl" in the central office comes in for a lot of unjust criticism. She is not all wise, but by many she is thought to be. She is not all powerful, but demands are made of her that involves this endowment. She is not super-natural, and yet if she were to meet all demands, she would have to be. She is made of flesh, bones, blood and nerves, and yet she is often dealt with as though she had none of these. I heard a woman speaking to the girl in the central office one day, and I would not dare put what was said on paper. After the fit of anger was over, this woman boasted, "Believe me, I got that gal told!" We are not saying that all is perfection in the Central office, but we are saying that sweetness, patience, kindness, unselfishness are good things to have at the receiver end of the telephone line.

A young man moved to Clanton in January. He did not have a job, but he did not sit down and wait for one to come to him. He washed cars, he raked rubbish, he planted gardens, he ran errands, he unloaded cars, he picked strawberries, he swept floors. This young man was willing to work, and all who knew him, saw that there was not a lazy bone in his body. Now that young fellow has a steady job at sixty dollars per month. The job was given to him because it was known that he wanted to make honest dollars. The work that he is now doing calls for brawn and perspiration, but the boy is happy on his job, and he will make good. Have you not seen strong, able men, sitting around wishing for dollars to roll toward them. I saw a little negro one day chasing a rabbit. I called to him, "Rastus, why run the rabbit in the blazing sun?" The teeth of the youngster shined like cat eyes at night as he glanced at me and then increased in speed. "Boss, I jes am got to ketch dis rabbit, or dare am no dinner at our house today," and the squeal of the rabbit was soon in the air. Where there is a will, there is a way. Having a sure enough willingness to work, helps in securing a job. Dollars have ceased to roll toward people. If you have them you have got to get out and chase them. They must be overtaken, or there will be no dollars in your house today.

I stood on the shore at Gragg's camp below Lay Dam, and watched the doctor as he amused himself and his guests in his speed boat. The powerful little engine was given all the gas it could consume, and the propeller pushed the craft at thirty miles per hour. The Doctor said, "I am going to stir the water," and he did. The boat was driven out and in, round and round. The water dashed and splashed, it leaped and plunged, it rippled and rolled, it parted and rushed together, and soon that part of the Coosa tide was one restless sea of roaring waves. The Doctor drove his boat to the shore and in a few moments the waves ceased to roll and there came to that disturbed water all of its former peace and beauty. There are many people who jump into the sea of life to create a commotion. They dash and splash, they rip and roar, they push and plunge and soon there is nothing but waves and confusion. Soon the man in the boat is landed on the shore of time, and he is hardly gone before the waters calm and the sea is at peace. You may think that you are a rip-roaring success, but when you are gone there will be a few dying splashes and you will be forgotten. I have long since ceased to worry about the fellow who jumps into the stream of life, "To stir the water."

Let me tell you about a certain man He is that fellow whom you know, who has a dominating passion for three good meals each day. He wants his table well filled and his coffee with sugar and cream. He wants good clothes to cover up his body. His hat must be just right, his tie must be in order, his clothes must fit like his skin and his shoes must shine while they try to hide out a big foot. He wants plenty of sleep. His bed must be comfortable, it must be fanned by the cooling breezes, no barking dog must disturb him in the midnight hours and no honking horn must molest his pleasant dreams. He wants plenty of attention from his fellow-man. They must gather about him saying, "Great is this wonderful gopher." They must pet him and call him by choice names and make much of his littleness. Such a man is superior to the Oyster only in his corporal size. Such a man opens his mouth to feed and enjoy himself, but he never opens his hands to serve his fellowman. He is a great big flabby, shabby, gawky, squawky gander, who should be an oyster and not a man.

Some father spoke a cross word to his child, and the heart of the little one was crushed. Was that father you? Some mother slapped the jaw of the little tot pulling at her apron strings, and scolded in a way that broke a little spirit. Was that mother you? Some parents got up last Sunday and were too lazy and indifferent to attend church and Sunday school, and as a result the children in that home are growing up for the jail and the gang. Are those parents any of you? Somebody stood on the street corner while the deep-toned pipe organ played the prelude, but he refused to heed the call to worship. Was that somebody you? Somebody slipped off into the dark and committeed a crime than can not be mentioned. Was that somebody you? Somebody will knock on the door of God's Jerusalem, but the door will not open. Will that somebody be you?

WHY DO PEOPLE DIE OF TUBERCULOSIS?

"If tuberculosis is being conquered so quickly why do so many still die of it?" asked a young teacher.

The answer is that the man in the street—(quite often he is the man who has tuberculosis) does not yet know enough about the disease. The campaign of education must go on. Patients who do have the disease must know all about safe-guarding others. Those who do not have it must learn how to develop resistance.

Dr. Christmas Seal urges the importance of early recognition. One of the greatest errors a sick person can commit is to say "Yes, I have a cough. But I'm not going to a chest clinic or a doctor because I'm afraid they will say I have tuberculosis." On the face of it such an attitude is rank folly; yet how many, many of our citizens display it. If one has the least suspicion of tuberculosis the only sane thing to do is to get medical advice and begin rest treatment without a day's delay. Such patients get well.

The first attack of tuberculosis is the one most easily met. It is when the patient reaches the advanced stage before he begins to fight that tuberculosis becomes hopeless.

Excerpts From L & N Employe's Magazine

Of the 4,853 grade crossing accidents in 1930, 1,276 or approximately 25 per cent were caused by drivers of motor vehicles crashing into the side of trains, according to the L & N Employes' Magazine for July. That publication also points out that 248 persons were killed and 1,771 injured in such accidents. Passenger automobiles alone striking the side of trains in 1930 number 1,130, killing 214 persons. In many instances the auto drivers first crashed through crossing gates before striking the trains.

"The Public does get something for nothing," declares a writer in the July number of the L & N Employes' Magazine. In an article dealing with the General Development Department of the L & N Railroad, which has been in existence for 31 years and which now numbers 27 people, this writer explains how the railroad aids in populating the waste lands along its territory; how its agricultural experts aid the farmers with their problems of agronomy, live stock raising, marketing, etc., and how its industrial agents assist in the location of new and the expansion of established industries in the territory served by the L & N. This service, according to the author, is absolutely free and no strings attached.

It has been said that an umbrella is anybody's property. So is a fish story —but an acceptance of its veracity is up to one's own judgment. J. P. Marrillia, L & N Veteran, Louisville, wishing to reassure members of the L & N Veterans' Club that there will be plenty of fish on hand for the free fish fry to be given by the Club on August 15, gives a rather remarkable illustration of the piscatorial ability of one W. H. Ford, L & N Veteran, Rocky Hill, Ky., who had agreed to catch and furnish the fish.

It seems from Mr. Marrillia's account in the July L & N Magazine that Mr. Ford went angling in the Green River, near Brownville, Ky., just by way of keeping his hand in. With a heavy line and strong hook, and a small sparrow for bait he cast and immediately got a strike. Pulling in he was disappointed to see only a small half-pound bream. During a moment of indecision Fisherman Ford felt a strong tug on his line and was surprised to find that a three pound catfish had swallowed the bream and was himself hooked.

Feeling that a three-pounder wasn't so bad for the first strike the angler began to haul in his line but hadn't got far before he began to think that catfish had turned into a whale. With the assistance of two friends he finally managed to land the catch and was amazed to find that a 46-pound catfish had swallowed the little three-pounder, hook, line, bream and all, and couldn't turn loose.

Petain Favored Defensive.

General Petain thought that for the present the allies would be forced to remain on the defensive because of lack of men. He said the French army had ninety-seven divisions with an infantry strength of from 5,000 to 6,000 men each, some thirty-odd of these divisions being in reserve and the rest in the trenches, besides eight cavalry divisions, two of which were dismounted and six mounted.

All divisions he thought could be kept up until April if there should be no fighting, but later on, even without a battle, he would have to break up five divisions to maintain the others, the six mounted cavalry divisions would have to be reduced to four, and before the end of the year the total force would have to be reduced by twenty divisions.

Foch Was for Counteroffensive.

General Foch declared that the best means of halting a strong and persistent offensive was a powerful counteroffensive.

"The German offensive at Verdun was stopped not by our resistance there but by our offensive on the Somme in 1916," said General Foch. "Such an operation is possible only when foreseen and prepared beforehand. In planning the counteroffensive I think that the entire front must be considered as a whole and not the French as one part and the British as another. The plan must envisage them together preparing for offensive action on a common battlefield with all the forces at their disposal."

General Robertson expressed accord with Foch, but he did not see where or with what means such an offensive could be executed, and stated that the war could not be won by remaining on the defensive.

"Give us back the troops from Salonika and we will commence offensives," said General Haig.

"We were not speaking of offensives, but of counteroffensives," General Foch replied.

General Robertson remarked that of course the French and British could reinforce each other and make counterattacks, and then asked: "Could they do more than that?"

"Not without the Americans," General Petain answered him.

Dependent Upon U. S.

General Robertson then said: "I think our only hope lies in American reserves," and he wanted to hear from me.

I stated that but few of the allied authorities seemed to realize that American participation would depend upon the amount of shipping available for the transportation of our troops and that the time when they would be needed was near at hand. As there had been some reference to amalgamation, I also took occasion to emphasize the point that we expected as a matter of course that the American army would have its own front as an independent force and not be used merely as a reserve to be sent here and there. One insuperable reason, I said, why we could not amalgamate with the Frnech was the difference in language, and I added that we would not use our troops in that way at all unless it became absolutely necessary.

I then discussed our problems, calling attention to the delays at the French ports and our shortage of rail transportation, and touched on the backward state of procurement of equipment, munitions and airplanes. They all appeared surprised to learn of our difficulties, especially General Foch, although, even as chief of the general staff, he apparently could not interfere in matters handled directly by the ministry. It was astonishing to find how little comprehension any of them had of the enormous task that confronted the Americans.

Foch said: "None of these questions has been referred to me," whereupon Petain retorted that "one should not wait until such things are brought to his attention, but should look around and find them." Petain added at once that he would send an official to study our situation, and Haig later sent one of his officers, who offered many suggestions out of his own experience.

It was the sense of the conference that every assistance should be given us in getting our troops across, and all seemed fully to realize that no successful offensive could be undertaken without them.

Bliss Favors British Plan.

Conversations with General Robertson continued the next day at the Crillon hotel in Paris, with General Bliss present. The same arguments were repeated in favor of incorporating American units into British divisions, and General Bliss expressed himself in favor of the Robertson plan. I was forced to declare myself then and there. My stand was not quite what Robertson had expected, and the meeting adjourned with the position of all concerned no longer in doubt.

General Bliss and I met later by appointment to talk the matter over between ourselves and, if possible, come to an understanding. After some discussion he suggested that each of us cable his views to Washington and ask for a decision. It was not my policy then or at any other time to put anything up to Washington that I could possibly decide myself.

This would have been the last thing to do in this case, especially as the secretary had left in my hands the determination as to how our troops should be employed. For two men in our positions to have appealed in this way would have indicated a clash, and Washington had enough trouble; besides, the secretary could not possibly have been sufficiently in touch with the undercurrent of these negotiations to make a wise decision.

So I said, "Well, Bliss, do you know what would happen if we should do that? We would both be relieved from further duty in France, and that is exactly what we should deserve."

We then spent some time examining the question from all angles, until finally he came around to my view and said: "I think you are right, and I shall back you up in the position you have taken."

CHAPTER XXVIII

Once General Bliss and I had reached an understanding as to our attitude toward amalgamation of our troops with the British he gave me his support in later conferences. When we saw the British representatives for further talks at Versailles January 29, 1918, all their arguments were met frankly and squarely. After they had presented their case Prime Minister Lloyd George asked Bliss for his views, to which he replied:

"Pershing will speak for us and whatever he says with regard to the disposition of the American troops will have my approval."

An agreement was then signed by Mr. Lloyd George, General Maurice and myself as set forth in the following copy of the memorandum submitted and lated cabled to Washington:

"In order to meet the situation as presented by Sir William Robertson and hasten the arrival and training of troops, it is proposed that the British government use the available sea transportation in question for bringing over the personnel of entire divisions under the following conditions:

"1. That the infantry and auxiliary troops of these divisions be trained with British divisions by battalions, under such plan as may be agreed upon.

"2. That the artillery be trained under American direction in the use of French material as at present.

"3. That the higher commanders and staff officers be assigned for training and experience with corresponding units of the British army.

"4. That when sufficiently trained, these battalions be reformed into regiments and that when the artillery is fully trained all the units comprising each division be united under their own officers for service.

"5. That the above plan be carried out without interference with the plans now in operation for bringing over American forces.

"6. That question of supply be arranged by agreement between the British and American commanders in chief.

"7. That question of arms and equipment be settled in similar manner."

War Council Meets Again.

The supreme war council began its third session January 30. At the opening session Mr. Lloyd George made a statement in some detail of the situation on the allied fronts. He then spoke of the large number of casualties the allies had suffered during 1917 and in a very pointed manner declared that the costly offensives had produced no tangible results. But instead, he said, the allies now found themselves short of man power at a critical period of the war. His sharp criticism was evidently directed at Sir Douglas Haig and General Robertson, but neither was given an opportunity to reply.

The military representatives presented a joint note with reference to military policy, as directed at the December meeting, and the opinion given was identical with that of the conference at Compiegne January 24 and also in August at the meeting in Paris, except that the campaign under General Allenby, then in progress in Palestine, should continue. It will be recalled that these two informal conferences of commanders in chief had concluded that the allies should remain on the defensive on all fronts until the Americans should arrive in sufficient force to warrant the offensive.

See No End of War Until 1919.

The joint note was approved as the decision of the council, with the understanding, as suggested by the French, that no white troops should be sent from France to Palestine. It was decidedly the opinion of M. Clemenceau and of all others present who expressed themselves that the war could not be ended until 1919, when the American army, it was thought, would reach its maximum strength.

The allied forces at the moment were superior in all active fronts, except in the Balkans, but the Greek mobilization, when completed, would add sufficient strength to give the allies the advantage there also. The American strength was then negligible, but the prospect was that we should have a few divisions ready for service by June, and by September possibly seventeen or the equivalent of thirty-four French divisions.

The danger on the western front lay in the continuous increase of the German forces and in their ability to concentrate in turn against the French and British, and as neither had sufficient reserves of their own it was clear that unless some arrangement could be made between them for better co-ordination and support the war might easily be lost before the Americans should arrive.

Plan Allied Reserve.

The study of this problem by the military representatives led to another joint note which proposed a plan for the organization of a general allied reserve. It provided that the British, French and Italian armies should each set apart a certain number of divisions to constitute this reserve, which would be called into action only in a great emergency. The discussion of this question became acrimonious. Haig and Petain both pointed out that they would be short of divisions very soon in case of severe fighting and presented figures on the subject that were very disturbing.

But the council's scheme was cut and dried. The recommendations set forth in the note were adopted then and there by the council. The general reserve was created and its control was placed under an executive war board to consist of Generals Foch, representing the French, chairman; Bliss, the Americans; Cadorna, the Italians, and a British general officer to be named.

At this meeting Mr. Lloyd George designated Gen. Sir Henry Wilson as the British representative, to the very evident disappointment of General Robertson, who was present at the session. The selection of Wilson was regarded by the British high command and the war office as open disapproval of their conduct of the war.

Winter of 1917-18 Most Severe.

It has been said that the winter of 1917-18 was the most severe of the war. The cold was at times so intense as to make the generally unheated houses, barns and lofts used as billets nearly uninhabitable. The gloom of short days and long nights in the isolated and largely depopulated French villages can hardly be described.

Then, as we have seen, there was also a shortage of heavy winter clothing, although frequent cables early in the fall had called attention to the probability of a deficiency. No doubt the demands were greater than the quartermaster department could meet, but the relatively small number of troops in France going through the winter under actual war conditions should have been given first consideration.

Much of the clothing that we received for our troops looked to be shoddy, and, being light and thin, of course offered insufficient protection.

The deficiencies were met in part by purchases from the British, although our men did not take kindly to the idea of wearing the uniform of another nation, and it was with considerable protest and chagrin that they did so until our own could be supplied.

To the credit of our officers and men be it said that they generally ignored adverse conditions, and, barring some irritation at French methods and occasionally at our own, they kept at their tasks with commendable determination. Looking back over the different phases of the war I regard that winter, with its difficulties, anxieties and apprehension for the future, as the most trying period of them all.

CHAPTER XXIX

At the ports in France the amount of freight discharged in January, 1918, was more encouraging, being about two-fifths as much as during the preceding seven months. The rate of discharge was accelerated to some extent by the better distribution of our transports by the navy. More construction material was being delivered where it was needed for port works and the future was somewhat clarified in this respect by the arrival of additional logging machinery.

During the month there was also an increase in troop shipments, including some elements of the Thirty-second (Haan's) division, with 20,000 men for the service of supply. By the end of January approximately 120,000 combat troops, 34,000 engineer troops and 61,000 others for the service of supply were in France. Although promising, this was only the merest start, as we were still far behind our schedule.

It must be added, however, that the increase in the arrivals of men and materials remained haphazard and not at all in the proportions needed.

It continued apparent that my recommendations were not accepted in an altogether unhesitating spirit of helpfulness and that the serious need for executive leadership back home had not been met.

My diary notes the following:

Chaumont, Monday, February 18, 1918.—General Foch and Major General Weygand visited headquarters Thursday, had luncheon with us and examined the general staff organization. Captain Todd, director of naval construction, came to confer regarding wireless stations at Bordeaux.

Left Friday, spent Saturday and Sunday visiting First division in Ansauville sector; inspected infantry in front-line trenches and the artillery. Called on General Debeney, French First army.

Returned this morning, stopping at aviation park, Colombey-les-Belles, Maj. Arthur Page commanding. Camouflage work exceptionally well done. Passed through Miracourt to see General de Castelnau, who speaks highly of our troops.

Foch Cold to U. S. Problems.

As General Foch, then chief of the French general staff, had shown some surprise when at the allied meeting at Compiegne in January I told of the delays and difficulties we were having at the ports and in the operation of railways, I invited him to make a visit to my headquarters, hoping to put him in touch with our activities.

We had already reached a state of development that confirmed the soundness of our organization and could forecast its ability to meet all requirements. I went with him to the various sections of the general staff and while he expressed no opinion about what he saw, his aide and spokesman, General Weygand, a staff officer of experience, was very complimentary.

Foch never seemed interested when I talked with him of our problems and I doubt whether he ever thought, knew or cared much about organization or questions of transportation and supply. He was essentially a student and a teacher of history and strategy.

"Treated Like Mendicants."

There continued to be considerable cause to find fault with the attitude and methods of French bureau officials.

Apropos the experience of many of our officers, I recall that one of the most efficient on duty at a very important port once said to me:

"General, the trouble is that these subordinate French officials in immediate charge are either so hide-bound or else so conceited that it would be as easy to convince a Greek statue as to make one of them understand. How in the world it happens, sir, that we do so well I do not see.

Pershing in Tin Hat.

"Here we have come 3,000 miles to help them and yet we are treated like mendicants on the street corner holding a tin cup for passing pennies.

"I know, sir, that co-operation is necessary if we hope to win the war but it requires an excessive effort on our part, with more failures than otherwise to our credit."

This was harsh comment, but there were times in the experience of most officers when it seemed to fit the case fairly well.

Officers Found Lax.

With reference to the inspection trip noted in my diary, I had recently inspected several stations like Vittel and Bourbonne-les-Bains, which were commanded by regular officers, of whom, naturally, much was expected, but before the World war our army had always been more or less careless in dress and none too strict when in the field, and these men were no exception to the rule. Even higher commanders were often found neglectful of their appearance and lax in the enforcement of disciplines.

But the conditions of service in France demanded more serious attention to these essentials, not only as a matter of pride but because of the general effect upon morale and efficiency. Good discipline is the first requisite to successful military effort, and the degree of its enforcement in a command is an almost certain index to the character of performance to be expected in battle.

Likewise, an officer or soldier who takes no pride in his personal appearance is usually found careless in other respects and to that extent less reliable in time of stress. It need hardly be added that those of this class who came under my observation and did not immediately respond to correction were very soon replaced.

Go Where you Please
On your Vacation...

Mother likes the mountains—sonny wants to go to camp and so does little sister—dad must work most of the summer—but they may go where they please and still keep together by telephone. Mother and the children may arrange to call dad regularly at a certain time, at office or home. It makes vacations more enjoyable and dispels anxiety to hear the voices of loved ones, telling of the day's happenings.

Calling at a prearranged time enables you to use the cheaper station-to-station service with no risk of missing the person wanted. If you call by number at night there is a still further reduction in cost. In using station-to-station service, ask for the distant telephone by number or location instead of asking for a particular person. When the distant telephone answers you may ask for whomever you want.

Wherever each member of the family goes this summer, the local telephone office will gladly give the cost of calling back home. Just ask for "Long Distance."

FEW IMPEACHMENTS

Only eleven Federal officeholders have been impeached since the foundation of the United States government. Of these three were removed from office, one was expelled from the Senate and another resigned his judgeship. Those impeached were:

Senator William Blount of Tennessee, charged with conspiracy, expelled by the Senate in 1797 and impeachment dropped. He later served as the president of the Tennessee state senate.

Judge John Pickering of New Hampshire, removed from office for drunkenness, 1804.

Supreme Court Justice Samuel Chase, acquitted of misconduct, 1805.

Judge James Peck of Missouri, acquitted of mistreating counsel, 1831.

Judge West W. Humphreys of Tennessee, removed for supporting the secession, 1862.

President Andrew Johnson, acquitted of high crimes and misdemeanors, 1868. The vote, 35 guilty, 19 not guilty, was less than the two-thirds necessary to convict.

Secretary of War William W. Belknap, acquitted of bribery charges, 1876.

Judge Charles Swayne of Florida, acquitted of misconduct, 1905.

Judge Alston G. Dayton of West Virginia, impeached but proceedings abandoned, 1915.

Judge George W. English of Illinois, resigned under impeachment, 1926.

A recent survey discloses that 110 Vermont towns are without physicians.

Restless, could not sleep

"THERE were days when I felt like I could not get my work done. I would get so nervous and 'trembly' I would have to lie down. I was very restless, and could not sleep at night.

My mother advised me to take Cardui, and I certainly am glad she did. It is the first thing that seemed to give me any strength. I felt better after the first bottle. I kept it up and am now feeling fine."—Mrs. T. R. Gibson, Fort Payne, Ala.

ORR PARTY RETURNED FROM EXTENDED MOTOR TRIP

Mrs. M. R. Orr and daughter, Miss Madelyn Orr, returned last week from a motor trip consuming four weeks. They were accompanied by Mrs. Robert Clive of Birmingham, and on arrival in Paris, Texas, the party was joined by Miss Olga Isom, of Huntsville.

The trip took the party through some of the most interesting parts of the United States, going into the states of Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Florida. They were joined by Miss Sara Cummings when in Clearwater, Fla. Miss Cummings and Miss Isom returned to Clanton with the party and are spending several days here as guests of the Orrs while Mrs. Clive returned to her home in Birmingham.

INTEREST IN VETCH AND AUSTRIAN WINTER PEAS GROWING

County Agent Stapp states that already much interest is being displayed over vetch and Austrian peas. He says that many farmers are talking about the fact that commercial nitrogen is high to buy and that since the producers of commercial nitrogen did not cut their price this year, we will be forced to grow our nitrogen.

Mr. Stapp thinks that hundreds of farmers who never planted vetch and peas before will plant them this time. Indications are that seed and inoculation will cost not more than $2.00 per acre this fall. The experienced vetch growers of the county agree with Mr. Stapp in the statement that $2.00's worth of vetch or peas planted this fall and crop turned next spring will do more good than six or seven dollar's worth of commercial fertilizer applied next spring.

The 4-H club boys are more interested in vetch and peas this year than usual. We wonder what club and what member will win the prizes offered for best score in the Austrian peas and vetch planting campaign.

Scout Camp At Camp Villa Success

Opelika, Ala., July 6.—Special.—Both in number of scouts in attendance and merit badge requirements completed. Camp Spring Villa was this year the most successful ever staged by the Central Alabama Area Council under the direction of Executive Scout John J. Sigwald. From councils in the area, 151 scouts participated for at least one of the three one-week sessions. This constitutes an increase of 84 scouts above attendance last year. Merit badges numbering 319 were awarded on basis of instruction by a group of professors from the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

Thirty Scouts of Tenderfoot rank advanced to Second Class. Eleven Second Class Scouts met the requirements for First Class rank, and 27 boys were awarded Junior Life Saving Certificates after training by an American Red Cross examiner.

E. J. Harris, assistant scout master at West Palm Beach, Fla., served as assistant camp director.

Scout P. P. Powell, Jr., fulfilled all requirements for the rank of Eagle Scout. His credentials have been forwarded to the National Court of Honor for official action.

Dr. Bradford Knapp, president of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, was one of the distinguished speakers to address the Scouts during their camp. He delivered the Father's Day address on June 21.

Over 500 visitors came to the camp this summer and wtinessed the marked improvement, principal among which were the new mess hall and bath house donated by the Opelika Kiwanis and Rotary clubs, respectively. Scouts likewise enjoyed the drinking fountain donated by the City of Opelika.

During the remainder of the summer the camp will be used by many 4-H clubs in this section of the State for their annual outings.

WORK AND PLAY

Farm people work too many hours, according to Dr. Seale Harris, one of the South's most prominent physicians, who declares that an eight-hour day is needed on the farm as well as elsewhere.

He thinks that the farmer gets into the habit of working long hours and consequently does not put forth as effective efforts as he would if he limited his daily period of labor. Dr. Harris says:

"Farmers ought to be encouraged to work strenuously eight hours a day and then take more rest and recreation instead of working feebly fifteen hours a day as many of them do."

While most farmers would resent being told that they work "feebly," there is no doubt that when one knows he is going to stick on the job for fifteen hours in a day he will not exert himself as energetically as he would for a shorter period.

Vigorous work relieved by a liberal amount of rest and recreation seems to be a good formula for health and efficiency.

These four sites are located as follows: one three miles east of Jemison, one, 5 miles east of Clanton; several springs in one section located near Mt. Creek, near the paved highway and near the railroad, and one near Stanton, two miles from the Selma highway.

The locating in Chilton County of this vast enterprise will certainly mean something worthwhile for the county, and the citizens are being urged to bend their efforts toward locating possible sites and advise Judge Reynolds immediately.

It is understood that the Commissioners Court of this county visited around at the four sites listed Wednesday.

LOCAL KIWANIS CLUB GATHERS WITH FARMERS

Meet at Maplesville Inspires Farmers and Kiwanians to More Cooperation

In an effort to stimulate a better understanding between farmers and business men of Maplesville and Clanton, and to assist the farmers, merchants and business men of Maplesville, Ala., to organize and cooperate in the growing and marketing of farm products, the Kiwanis Club of Clanton will go down in history as holding one of the most successful and inspiring meetings ever held in the county when members of the club joined with citizens in and around Maplesville Thursday night at a meeting and banquet, held at Maplesville.

Farmers, merchants and business men of the Maplesville section were invited to be guests of the Clanton Kiwanis Club Thursday night of this week, at which time it was proposed to create more interest in that section of the county on the growing and marketing of strawberries as a money crop.

Before the meeting, composed of eighty-five merchants and business men of Maplesville and Clanton, Dr. M. F. Jackson of Birmingham delivered a most inspiring and stimulating address urging a better understanding between the farmer and the merchant in the county.

Following the address of Dr. Jackson, the meeting was turned over to Erle Thomas, Kiwanian and vocational in-

TWO YOUTHS CAUGHT HERE AFTER LEAVING THEIR HOME

Two little boys, ages 10 and 12, arrived in Clanton one day the latter part of last week and were stopped by the police here. They had run away from their home and were driving the car belonging to the mother of one.

Noticing that the gasoline in the car was almost giving out, they stopped at a filling station on the Birmingham-Montgomery highway, south of Clanton and ordered their tank filled. The tank was replenished with the gas, and they immediately drove off without paying the station operator.

The officers at Clanton were called and were on the lookout for the lads. After being caught they refused to give their names. But when the word jail was mentioned to them, one broke down and with tears in his youthful eyes, told the whole story of how they had taken the car and left their home in Andalusia to 'go places.'

It is believed they were on their way to Birmingham, but it seemed they had no particular destination.

Chief Boockholdt took charge of the boys and carried them to his home. The mother of one, in Andalusia, was notified, and she immediately came to Clanton for them, and everything was settled up, and no doubt at this time, the lads are much wiser and home looks mighty good to them.

MRS. ALICE WILLIAMS DIED HERE ON LAST THURSDAY

Mrs. Alice Dixie Williams, age 48, died in Clanton last Thursday following a lingering illness lasting for several months. She has been a resident of near Verbena for a number of years and the people of Clanton will remember her as one of the popular and well thought of, operators at the local telephone office, where she was connected for several years, giving up that work sometime ago and going to Verbena, later having a nervous breakdown, and then going to Montgomery for a rest.

Funeral services were conducted at Evergreen, near Verbena by the Rev. Rogers of Marbury. Interment followed in the Evergreen cemetery, with Martin & Sons of Clanton in charge. She is survived by one daughter, Barbara and one son, Kirby, and other relatives.

WELCOME EXTENDED TO VERBENA AND MULBERRY

The hand of welcome is extended this week to our new correspondents at Verbena and in the Mulberry Community. They make their appearance in this issue of the News with some real live, well-written news items from their communities, and the News force welcomes them into the fine family of correspondents over the county.

NEHI TRUCK FIGURES IN ACCIDENT LAST MONDAY

A truck belonging to the Nehi Bottling Company of Clanton collided with a car said to have been driven by Mrs. A. S. Boyd of Birmingham, on the Birmingham-Montgomery highway last Monday, right at the Autauga County line. The truck was driven by Burt Inzer, who received a severe shock and slight bruises, it was stated.

The accident is said to have occured when the Boyd car swerved to the left of the road, attempting to drive into a side road. Both vehicles were somewhat damaged, and Mrs. Boyd received a gash on her left arm. Inzer stopped a passing motorist and brought the injured woman to the hospital in Clanton where she received medical aid.

NINE YEAR OLD MURDER COMES TO LIGHT AGAIN

Killer of John Ed Bearden Is Believed In Hands Of Officers Here

Bringing to light the murder of John Ed Bearden, farmer who resided near Maplesville, Alabama, and who was killed in the summer of 1922, comes the arrest of a man who is believed to be the slayer, according to information from the office of the Sheriff here.

Back in 1922, either in the month of June or July, John Bearden, a fairly well to do farmer of the western part of this county, requested of a young man that he did not wish him to call on his daughter anymore. The young man is said to have been Milton McCormick. McCormick secured a shot gun and calling Bearden from the house, let go a full charge into the latter's abdomen, according to the story given the News.

McCormick was arrested and lodged in the jail in Clanton shortly after the shooting, during the time when John Gore was sheriff, and eventually made his escape from the jail, it was stated. It seems that no trace had been found of the murderer again, until last Monday the office of Sheriff Gillespie in Clanton received a call from officers in Louisville, Miss., in regard to the man sought in the murder.

After giving the Mississippi officers a description of the man wanted here for murder, it was decided they had that man. Officers from here went to Louisville, Miss., Tuesday to view the prisoner and arrived in Clanton with him Tuesday night.

The man believed to be McCormick was brought to the Montgomery jail late Tuesday night. He stoutly denies that he is Milton McCormick saying that his name is Dalton McCormick, and that he is a brother to Milton, according to officers here. However, men from Maplesville who saw the prisoner Tuesday state that he is the man wanted, it was said.

Accident Injuries Fatal To Woman

Mrs. Lucile Nash Adams and Jerome Greenwell were injured in an automobile accident about four miles south of Clanton last Thursday night just before midnight, when the car in which they were riding is said to have plunged off the highway and struck a post.

Mrs. Adams and Greenwell were from Louisville, Ky., and en route to Biloxi, Miss., when the accident occured, it was stated, and Greenwell, a young man, stated that he believed he must have gone to sleep while driving. A Martin's ambulance from Clanton brought them to the Central Alabama Hospital here where Greenwell was found not to be seriously injured. Mrs. Adams who is 65 years old, died from her injuries last Saturday morning, her body being prepared for burial and shipped to Louisville by Martin & Sons of Clanton.

Mrs. Adams had secured Greenwell to drive her to Biloxi, and it was stated that young Greenwell was to be married there, and the three were to make the return trip together.

STATE FARMERS PLANT 25 PER CENT MORE HAY

It is the intention of Alabama farmers to cut hay from 686,000 acres of land this year compared with a harvested acreage of 554,000 last year. A condition of 65 per cent of tame and 58 per cent of wild hay on July 1 indicated a total production of 479,000 tons compared with 402,000 last year, says F. W. Gist, agricultural statistician.

"The increase in acreage was 25 per cent," he said, but conditions are not so favorable on account of drought. Legume crops turned into hay may yet develop into a much better condition and higher yields.

JIM ARMSTRONG IS GETTING REPUTATION ON PHEASANTS

Much has been written and said about the efforts being made in this county by various citizens on raising Pheasants and getting them distributed, and of their efforts to get people to protect them, but this time something is being said about one individual who is attracting wide attention on his particular Pheasants.

This is Jim Armstrong, who resides out west of Clanton near the home of Dr. P. T. Hinkle. Mr. Armstrong is very much interested in Pheasant raising and so far has made considerable progress with his flock. If a person should visit the home of Mr. Armstrong, he would take particular pains to show them some extra large Pheasants and some that really do not look like the ordinary Pheasant, but hatched and are being raised as other Pheasants are on his farm.

To some, no doubt, it would be difficult to believe that the particular two birds referred to are really pheasants, but Mr. Armstrong is almost convinced they are pheasants, because they were hatched right along with Pheasants, and there seems to be no particular reason why they should not be Pheasants. But nevertheless, for something out-of-the-ordinary, one should see these two or three particular birds Mr. Armstrong has raised with Pheasants, and then draw individual conclusions—they are attarcting attention, as will be vouched for, no doubt, by Mr. Armstrong.

GOLF COURSE TO BE READY IN FEW DAYS

Work on Construction Being Pushed Every Day; More Interest Shown

Several days ago the work of constructing a golf course for Clanton started and according to Dane Jensen, who is supervising the work, he will have several holes ready by the latter part of the week.

The course will be located just south of Clanton on the place known as the Dennis Farm, which is ideally located, and interest in the enterprise appears to be growing among the members of the club and others who will probably become members.

This course will be the first large golf course for Clanton and those men of Clanton who have organized into a golf club, are to be congratulated on their efforts to construct this project.

New members are expected to come into the club as soon as the course is completed, which will be only a matter of a few days, now according to Jensen, provided the weather will permit.

ALABAMA OAT ACREAGE INCREASED 75 PER CENT

An increase of 75 per cent in the Alabama oat acreage and a favorable season for maturity combined to promise a total production of 4,202,00 bushels against a crop harvested last year of only 1,908,000. The acreage this year is 191,000 compared with 109.000 harvested last year, and the preliminary yield is estimated at 22 bushels per acre.

SHERIFF NABS FIFTY GALLON STILL IN RAID

Three Men Arrested While Still In Operation; Six Others Arrested

The past several days brought some increased activities to the Sheriff and his deputies, who report the arrest of nine men and the capture of a fifty gallon still.

There were five of the nine charged with violating the prohibition law, it was stated, and three alleged distillers

The still was said to have been located somewhat in the western part of the county, and the sheriff's office reported it as being in full operation at the time of the raid and the arrest of the three men who were said to have been at the still. Along with the still there were approximately 120 gallons of beer and five gallons of whiskey destroyed, it was stated.

This report from the Sheriff's office includes arrests made up to last Tuesday at noon, at which time officers from here had gone to Louisville, Miss., to investigate information concerning Milton McCormick, who is alleged to have shot and killed John Ed Bearden, near Maplesville approximately nine years ago..

"AS SEEN" WILL BE NEW COLUMN IN NEWS WEEKLY

A bit of reasoning and advice will come to the readers of the News each week under the head "As Seen" by John Goodloe. This column begins in this issue and will probably appear each week. It is written by a former Clanton resident, who is using as his nom de plume, "John Goodloe." The column this week is good sound reasoning. The writer now resides in another state and yet is quite familiar with local conditions.

More Boll Weevils Found In Alabama

Auburn, Ala., July 21.—Information received by W. A. Ruffin, extension entomologist at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, indicates that boll weevils are appearing in large numbers in cotton fields of south Alabama, and their appearance in cotton fields elsewhere in the state is expected.

These reports brought from Mr. Ruffin the suggestion that farmers be prepared to poison weevils if, and when, it becomes advisable to do so. This recommendation is based upon the fact that poisoning properly done is profitable when and where needed.

Mr. Ruffin explained that weevils do most of their damage in July and August and that infestation is now sufficient for big damage if weather conditions do not provide natural control, which is not probable.

Any cotton grower who has a supply of calcium arsenate and machinery for applying it is ready to stop boll weevil damage whenever it becomes great enough to warrant an application of poison. Thus poison and machinery provide insurance. County agents are advising farmers about poison, giving information as to when and how to apply it.

A few farmers began poisoning early in July, and more are expected to apply it as the season advances. A few dollars spent on poison may protect a crop of cotton.

Miss Rena Willis of Mumford spent last Monday in Clanton with Mrs Marjorine Henley, en route to her home from Montgomery.

REVIVAL OPENS SOON, THORSBY BAPTISTCHURCH

Rev. Barnes of Montgomery Will Deliver Sermons To Begin Next Sunday

As announced sometime ago, the revival meeting at the Baptist church in Thorsby will begin next Sunday, according to the Rev. J. W. Jones, pastor of the church, and a man whose efforts have brought much toward the work of that church as well as others over the county.

The preaching for this revival meeting will be done by the Rev. F. M. Barnes, widely known pastor of Montgomery, Alabama, and from all indications, this meeting is being heartily looked forward to by people of Thorsby and surrounding sections.

Rev. Barnes was reared near Plantedsville, Ala., and people of this section feel proud of him as he has gone forward in his work. He is an outstanding preacher, pastor and evangelist, and has been pastor of the Clayton Street Baptist church in Montgomery for some time

WATERMELONS AND BUCKSHOT ATTRACTIONS IN PATCH HERE

Watermelons were the first attractions to a group of five boys one night last week in the patch of Lonza Headley, on Durwood Broadhead's land near the cotton mill, and buckshot came in as an added attraction, according to a story reaching the News this week.

Headley was aroused from his slumber the other night by a young man who told him he would be 'around Friday to pay you what I owe you.' Headley became suspicious, and noticed the boy did not go in the direction he should have, but turned toward Headley's watermelon patch. Headley saw that the patch was his destination and put on his clothes, secured a shotgun, and went up to the patch, where he found five young men busily engaged in separating the juicy melons from the vines.

When Headley accosted the quintet, they made a long run for the wide open spaces, and when he demanded that they halt, only two heeded, while the others kept going until a charge of buckshot from Headley's gun, brought them to a halt. One of the youths was badly shot, it was stated, and was carried to a Birmingham hospital for treatment, where many of the shots were removed, while some could not be reached, it was said

Mr. Headley and Mr. Broadhead, in commenting on this occurence, stated that in the past it seemed as those who wanted anything from the farm there, would go and take it, but they intended to put a stop to such practice There is no mistaking Headley's intentions about that, judging from his action the other night.

Mr. and Mrs. John C Page and attractive daughter, Peggy, returned the first of the week from a visit with relatives in Tennessee

You boys sure carry the news of the county, all right."

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Howard, Lloyd and Ella, and Mrs. Bima Husby reached St. Elmo, Ala., Mrs. Husby's home, Sunday evening, July 12th, after visiting a day there with realtives, the Howard family returned to Thorsby, July 14th.

On June 2nd they started out in their car, going to Indiana where Lloyd joined the party and the journey was continued. Chicago was the first stop, where Mr. Howard has some cousins. Many things of interest were seen in this big city, among them, some buildings already finished and others under construction for the World's Fair. One which has recently been completed and stocked is the Aquarium. There can be seen fish from all over the world, all sizes, shapes and colors. From Chicago the trail led through Wisconsin, whose beautiful capitol at Madison, was visited. Marble from every state in the union was used in this building, the colors ranging from almost pure black to white, are most artistically combined. At La Crosse, Wis., they crossed the Mississippi River and were very much surprised that it was such a small river. They then stopped with relatives in Minnesota. Ever so many beautiful lakes were seen along the roads in this state, all abounding in fish, but since the state enforces very rigid fishing laws, they did not try their luck at that. Sioux City, Iowa was the next stop, where Mrs. Husby saw her sister for the first time in thirty-four years. This was Mrs. Howard's birthplace. The old home and the school house where she went to school her first year were still there.

Then relatives were visited in both South and North Dakota. The prairie lands in these states were quite different from our little hilly farms around here. There the average farmer tended about two hundred acres or more. A hundred acres in corn on each farm there is a common thing. One man cultivates with four horses, cultivating four rows of young corn at a time.

Gillette, Wyoming, where John Husby, Mrs. Howard's brother, lives, was the next stop. This is a desolate state, but there must be something about it that holds a person once they have lived there a few months. Everyone they spoke to said they would never live anywhere else. Those who knew John may be interested to know he was married last August. His wife is a lively woman. Her home was originally in Missouri, but she had taught school in Gillette for years. Wyoming has extensive coal fields. One mine they saw had a vein ninety feet thick and only ten feet down from the surface of the earth. Another interesting thing they saw near Gillette was a burning coal field. It has burned as long as anyone out there can remember. There were large cracks in the earth from which, blue flames escaped. They said at night the flames appeared somewhat red. Parties of young folks go out there for weiner roasts. John also took the Howard's to a big ranch where buffalo were raised. They saw twelve large ones and three buffalo calves.

From Gillette the route led to the Yellowstone National Park. On this road they had a sample of what "gumbo" soil is. They saw no paved roads in Wyoming and only a little graveled. They were skimming over a lovely graded road with hard smooth surface when all at once a shower came up and what had been so nice became a very slippery road. One car went into a ditch and another was across the road in front of them. This held up traffic and soon there was a big string of cars lined up in the road. They were from all over the Central and Eastern United States, mostly tourists headed for the park. Well, for a time it looked as though there would be a short order slumber party out there in the lonely hills, where nothing but sage brush grows and only jack rabbits and coyotes abound. But finally the men got the first cars straight and walked on the sides of each other's cars keeping places. The rain having stopped we finally made the six miles to the graveled road. A funny experience after it was over.

The next morning they traveled over what they called the most scenic seventy miles of road in the world, from Cody to the Park. This was over the Big Horn Mountains, the road following along the Shoeshone River Canyon, saw the Shoeshone Dam which irrigates thousands of acres of land. At them from slipping over the hundred one place they were ten thousand feet above sea level.

The Park was one thrill after another. With bears and elk roaming around beside you, and the geysers, hot springs beautiful lakes, rivers, waterfalls and the gorgeous canyon of the Yellowstone River, their short stay of a day there was crowded with interest.

From there the party headed for Seattle where Mr. Howard's sister, Ida Leclair and family live. The beautiful spruce and fir trees through Oregon and Washington were sights to be remembered. As they went through Boise, Idaho, they went to see Miss Stoddard and her mother. Miss Stoddard has put on a little flesh and looks better than they had ever seen her before. She seemed glad to see some one from Thorsby.

While in Seattle they went on the Warship "Texas." This is a little city on water. They have everything, even to motion pictures on board.

From Seattle the homeward route led through Oregon, (where, by the way, they saw Maud Gerald Atwood), California, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama. Coming home from the south where as they started out going north. While in El Paso, Texas, they crossed over the Rio Grande River into Juarez, Mexico. The crossing of the Mississippi River at its mouth was quite longer than at La Crosse, Wisconsin.

In all the Howard's traveled over ten thousand miles on this trip of six weeks. Went through twenty-one states and three states were crossed twice. A few hot days were experienced, but for the most the weather was grand and the trip a series of pleasure.

BOY SCOUT MEETING AT THORSBY

Arrangements have been made to hold a community meeting in the interest of Boy Scouts at the Congregational church, Thorsby, on Thursday, July 23rd, at 7:30 p.m.

John J. Sigwald, District Executive for a large district in Alabama, a man thoroughly versed in Boy Scout matters, will be the principal speaker.

These arrangements have been made through the active assistance of Mr. C. E. Stapp of Clanton, County Farm Agent, and also chairman of the Clanton District of Boy Scouts, and vice president of the central Alabama Area Council, of which Clanton and Thorsby Troops are members. It is expected that Mr. Stapp will be present and assist in the meeting.

During the meeting opportunity will be given for people interested to ask questions of these Scout executives concerning things pertaining to Scouts, which they wish to have explained.

As noted above this is intended to be a Community meeting for all who are interested in the Boys of Thorsby and vicinity. Most folks have heard of Boy Scouts, but many do not know of its value to growing boys and their parents or anyone interested in training of our boys for good citizenship.

Thorsby Institute is the sponsoring organization for Thorsby Troop of Boy Scouts. All persons, whether members of its Board of Trustees, Committees, faculty or students, past or present; together with all Boy Scouts, their parents and friends, boys and young men and even young boys, not yet old enough to join, but old enough to learn what they may grow to be, are invited. If in this invitation any left out who want to come you will be welcome. We hope all will be interested.

My Experiences in the WORLD WAR

CHAPTER XXX

Frequent German raids and renewed activity all along the front by March 1, 1918, indicated the great German offensive might start at any time. The French general staff thought the allies would be able to hold without serious difficulty until we could help, but it was doubtful enough to cause grave apprehension.

It was depressing to think that ten months had elapsed since our entry into the war and that we were just barely ready with one division of 25,000 men.

My diary shows the following notations:

> Chaumont, Wednesday, March 6, 1918.—Heavy German raid repulsed by First division Friday morning. The enemy also raided the Twenty-sixth division lines and were driven off.
> Went to Ligny-en-Barrios Sunday to meet M. Clemenceau, who came to congratulate the First division on success repulsing raid. Met General Debeney, who was enthusiastic over conduct of our men. Spent the night at First division headquarters.
> Motored to Langres with Harbord Monday to speak at opening of second session of general staff college. Germans made raid on Forty-second division that morning.

Upon conclusion of this inspection of the First division I considered it ready to take the offensive at any time. It had been eight months in France, with varied experiences in training, had occupied an independent position in the St. Mihiel sector and had made several successful trench raids. Generals Duncan and Buck had their infantry brigades in efficient shape and Summerall had carried the training of the artillery brigade to a high degree.

Finds Wounded Cheerful.

The front occupied by the One Hundred Sixty-eighth regiment, near Badonvillers, had been under a severe artillery attack on the fourth and a trench mortar platoon had been almost completely destroyed. The French army commander congratulated General Menoher on the way in which our troops repulsed this raid. After an inspection of the different regiments of the division and a visit to the scene of this action, I went to the hospital to see the wounded.

They were all very cheerful, especially a young officer, Lieut. A. W. Terrel, Fifty-first artillery regiment, who had lost a leg. He said that he wanted to stay through to the end of the war, and hoped he could find something to do as a clerk. All these first contacts with the enemy were relatively small affairs, of course, but they furnished many examples of what we could expect of the American soldier:

My diary notes this:

> Paris, Sunday, March 10, 1918.—Spent Thursday morning with Kernan, Langfitt and Atterbury and made adjustments in port and railway construction and management. Visited Camp de Mailly, where seacoast artillery is having splendid training under General Coe.
> On Friday visited Edwards' Twenty-sixth division serving on Chemin des Dames under General Maud'huy, the French corps commander. Arrived in Paris late at night during airplane attack. Branch of judge advocate general's office established at my headquarters.

Upon Colonel Bradley's report of thirty-day medical supplies on hand, sent urgent cable requesting immediate shipments. Cabled disapproval of suggestion by Mr. Paderewski for organization of division of men with Polish antecedents. Secretary of War Baker landed at Brest today.

French Train U. S. Cooks.

Major General Maud'huy spoke with considerable enthusiasm of the men and of the officers of the Twenty-sixth division, below regimental commanders, and especially praised their conduct of trench raids. He complimented General Traub, one of the brigade commanders, but was of the opinion that the higher officers, generally, needed more experience to make them efficient. American troops that served with General Maud'huy held him in high esteem. He was scrupulous regarding their instruction, to which he gave special attention.

He was very solicitous of the welfare of our troops, even going so far as to interest himself in the preparation of their food by detailing French cooks to teach ours the art. When I expressed my appreciation of his action, he said: "You know, we are a nation of cooks and we delight in preparing good things to eat." After their instruction the cooks in these units did better, thanks to the initiative of this fine old French general.

Many of the cooks of the old army became experts and the men in early days in the West fared better as a rule than our men in France, where the cooks lacked experience. Personal supervision by officers and the establishment of cooking schools brought improvement in due course. However, there is little doubt that much of the intestinal trouble in our divisions during the early part of their service abroad was caused by poorly cooked food.

Secretary Baker Arrives.

Secretary Baker arrived at Brest March 10, as my diary showed, and I met him and his party in Paris the next morning. The secretary's party consisted of Maj. Gen. W. M. Black, chief of engineers; Lieut. Col. M. L. Brett, Commander R. D. White of the navy, and Ralph Hayes, his secretary.

It was essential that the secretary receive every opportunity to inspect our whole layout, from the front areas to the services of supply, that he might become familiar with plans, observe the progress made toward their completion, and obtain first-hand information of our requirements, all of which he was especially anxious to do. Leaving Paris March 12 we inspected our most important ports, depots, hospitals, regulating stations, motor parks and schools, and returned March 17 to my headquarters at Chaumont.

The main air service school at Issoudun, which we visited, was a hive of activity, being one of the fifteen schools where early instruction in flying was given. General Foulois and Colonel Kilner went with us through the school, the shops and the Red Cross and "Y" buildings. I think the secretary was surprised to see here the really expert flying considered necessary to prepare aviators for their hazardous life at the front.

Moving Supplies to Troops.

At Gievres, about 125 miles directly south of Paris, on our main line of supply, running to the front, were 20,000 men employed under Col. Charles J. Symmonds, managing our largest interior depot.

To illustrate the celerity with which the system operated we need take but one example, which occurred when everything in the depot was in full swing.

At 8:15 one morning in August a telegram was received ordering exactly 4,596 tons of supplies, including 1,250,000 cans of tomatoes, 1,000,000 pounds of sugar, 600,000 cans of corned beef, 750,000 pounds of tinned hash and 150,000 pounds of dry beans. At 6:15 o'clock in the evening, or just ten hours later, this colossal requisition, which required 457 cars for transport, was loaded and on its way to the advance depot.

No other place gave such an impression of the tremendous task of supplying our armies and the perfection of organization necessary to do it efficiently.

The secretary got a bird's eye view of the general plan which would provide the supplies for an army of 2,000,000 and which, with additional construction, would be able to meet the demands of an army twice that size.

Back at Chaumont I received word that arrangements had been made for the shipment of six divisions for training with the British—the Seventy-seventh, Eighty-second, Twenty-eighth, Seventy-eighth, Eightieth and Thirtieth.

CHAPTER XXXI

March 21 the great German offensive began against the British armies between the Oise and the Scarpe, near the junction of the French and British lines, on a front about fifty miles in length, extending from near La Fere to Arras. Near the center of the attack was General Gough's Fifth army, with the Third army under General Byng on its left.

The artillery bombardment preceding the infantry advance was of short duration, but of great intensity, with excessive use of gas shells. Following a heavy barrage the German infantry, using the same tactical methods that had been so successful at Figa and Carporetto, delivered its blow. The weather favored the enemy as a heavy fog continued intermittently for three days, much to the disadvantage of the defense. The overwhelming force of sixty-four especially trained German divisions out of their one hundred ninety-two then on the western front compelled the British lines to yield. Although at the end of the first day the Fifth army had not entirely given away, its losses had reached several thousand, and there was no question that the Germans were making a serious attempt to separate the British and French armies.

British Pushed Back 37 Miles.

The last one of Gough's reserves was put in on the second day, yet he received no support to stop the widening gap in the British front until the following day, when one French infantry division and one French dismounted cavalry division arrived. On the 24th four others got into position. These divisions and others that came in the next two or three days were put into battle by General Fayole without regard to the integrity of units or the order of their entry, some of them being very short of ammunition.

The British Fifth army was evidently overwhelmed from the start, yet no British reinforcements were sent to Gough until the 24th, and then only one division, no others arriving during the first week. By the fifth day the German forces had driven a salient into the British front some thirty-seven miles deep and were threatening the important railway center of Amiens, the capture of which would probably have made a complete breach between the French and British armies.

In the moment of greatest stress, when it seemed very doubtful whether the German advance could be stopped, General Petain sent the following order to his armies:

"The enemy has hurled himself upon us in a supreme effort.

"He wants to separate us from the English so as to open the way to Paris. Cost what it may, he must be stopped.

"Hold your ground! Stand firm! Our (American) comrades are arriving. All together you will throw yourselves upon the invader.

"The battle is on. Soldiers of the Marne, of the Yser and of Verdun, I call upon you. The fate of France hangs in the balance."

The reports from the front gave an extremely dark picture of disaster, and I felt we should do everything possible to render assistance. It was to offer General Petain such of our troops as could be used that I went to Compiegne March 25.

The general's customary confident and nonchalant attitude was entirely gone and he wore a very worried expression. I told him that for the moment I should waive the idea of forming the I corps and that any of our divisions that could be of service were at his disposal, but with the qualifying remark that of course we should look forward eventually to their assembly under their own commander.

March 24 it developed that the French divisions had received orders that if the enemy continued his drive in the direction of Amiens they were to fall back so as to cover Paris. Marshal Haig, fearing that this would result in separating the two armies, at once communicated the situation to his government. This brought about an important conference at Doullens March 26 between members of the British and French governments, in which it was decided that some authority should be designated to co-ordinate the action of the two armies, and General Foch was selected.

I was not present at the Doullens conference, but upon learning of its action it seemed essential that General Foch himself should know our desire to do what we could to strengthen the allies. The British loss was then estimated at not less than 150,000. I recall meeting Lord Northcliffe March 24 and found him almost unable to speak of it, so many of his friends had lost relatives. The depression among their people was probably worse than at any other period of the war.

Among the French there was much anxiety as to the safety of Paris and there was talk of the government having to move to Bordeaux again, as it had done in 1914. The allied lines had not been stabilized and although I had offered our troops to Petain it seemed to me that it might be well to make it emphatic that I was ready to put into battle everything we could muster. I had often thought of the possibility of having to do this, and I went to find out the situation and let General Foch know our attitude.

Gives Word to Foch.

As we entered General Foch's farmhouse headquarters near Clermont-sur-Oise, Clemenceau, Foch, Petain and Loucheur were intently studying a map spread out on the table. The situation was pointed out to me, showing that already the British had used thirty divisions and the French seventeen against the Germans' seventy-eight. It seemed to be the opinion that the British Fifth army was getting back on its feet and that the lines would hold for the time being.

I intimated that I had come to see General Foch and the others withdrew into the yard, leaving us alone. I told him that the Americans were ready and anxious to do their part in this crisis, that I was willing to send him any troops we had, and asked for suggestions as to how we might help. He was evidently very much touched and in his enthusiasm took me by the arm and without hesitation rushed me out across the lawn to where the others stood, and asked me to repeat what I had said to him.

They, of course, showed keen interest, especially M. Clemenceau, as I told them what I had said to General Foch. Colonel Boyd, my aid, was kind enough to say that, under the inspiration of the moment, my French was spoken with a fluency that I could not have mastered ten minutes before or after.

Pershing's Offer of Troops.

It appeared in the French papers the next morning, although I feel certain that it was written up in much better French than I actually used.

The English translation follows:

"I have come to tell you that the American people would consider it a great honor for our troops to be engaged in the present battle; I ask you for this in their name and my own.

"At this moment there are no other questions but of fighting.

"Infantry, artillery, aviation, all that we have are yours; use them as you wish. More will come, in numbers equal to requirements.

"I have come especially to tell you that the American people will be proud to take part in the greatest battle of history."

If the responsibility had been mine I should not have hesitated a moment to put into the battle any or all of our five divisions then in France. The First was the only one used for the time being, the others being placed in quiet sectors, each to relieve two French divisions. As our divisions were more than twice as large as theirs it amounted to almost immediate reinforcement of ten divisions.

At the time of the German attack a battalion of the American Sixth regiment of engineers was on duty behind the British Fifth army, engaged in railway construction and repairs. These troops were given arms and participated with the British forces in the defensive operations until after the lines were stabilized.

O'ER THE COUNTY

By The Rambling Reporter

Out on Jemison, Ala., Route 1, there are several families who have a lot of that Southern hospitality, so I found the other day. There is the family of Mr. and Mrs. Hub Taylor with three children, Johnnie, Herbert and Jessie Lee. Mr. Taylor farms about 20 acres of ground and has a comfortable home.

Stopped at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Barnett a little farther on and found a young energetic farmer with 20 acres of land getting his attention. Mr. Barnett was out in the field looking over his crops the other afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Barnett have one young daughter, Mavis.

There is another Barnett family in the same neighborhood. That is the family of W. A. Barnett, who with Mrs. Barnett, have three sons living with them, F. O. Barnett, O. O. Barnett, and C. C. Barnett. C. C. Barnett drives one of the school buses to Jemison, while the others are busy at home and on the farm. W. P. Barnett, in the above paragraph is another son of Mr. and Mrs. W. A.

On out on Jemison Route 1, there is a happy young couple, in a nice little comfortable home. They are Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Mims. I found them both at home, sitting on the porch. Mr Mims has about 20 acres he is farming, and states that he expects to net a little cash this year on watermelons. He is the son of Bill Mims, and I found he is going to read the Chilton County News.

Stopped at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Thrash where I found a family that was pretty busy attending to their farm. Mr. and Mrs. Thrash have eight children at home with them and all are fine and healthy. They are Mrs. Nellie Osborn, C. B., Nannie, Jewel, Voncile, Chelsea, Gladney and Mae Lee Mr. Thrash has 50 acres of land that he tends, raising strawberries, watermelons, and other good crops. He sold 131 crates of strawberries this year, and when I came to his home, he with two elder sons, were out near the house attending to their berries and doing some plowing.

Came to the home of another Thrash family on Jemison, Route 1. This is the family of Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Thrash, who have twelve fine children, some of whom are married and do not live here. Those at home are Burnie, Onzelle, Artelle, Preston, Thelma, Clarice, Hoyt, and Willadean. Onzelle and Artelle, two daughters, are twins, and there are four children of Mr. and Mrs. Thrash who are married. Mr. Thrash farms eighty acres of land and has a very comfortable home. He sold 375 crates of strawberries this year and netted a neat little sum of money from them. Just as I stopped at his home, he and some of his children were coming from the watermelon patch with some nice melons.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Glass live on Jemison Route 1, also, and they too have a nice little comfortable home. I found two fine looking children playing in the yard, and Mrs. Glass in the back yard. There are four children in this family, Vina, Harman, Aubrey and Braxton. They raised quite a number of crates of berries, and now have a nice field of melons coming in.

Then there is the family of Mrs. Z. M. Williams, with four children, William, Ruby, Johnnie, and Berniece. They have a nice home, and are located on eighty acres of good land, where they brought in some cash this year from strawberries. Watermelons are making their appearance on this farm also.

Found this fellow V. Sorrell, who with a Mr. Wilson, is doing some extensive truck farming and marketing, out in the front yard getting some products ready for the market the next day.

Stopped at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Daniel. Mr. Daniel also has a nice large and comfortable home on Jemison Route One and has three children, J. T., Lois and G. L., Jr. Mr Daniel has been active in the saw mill and lumber business for a number of years and is well known in the county. He had the misfortune recently of receiving a serious injury to his left hand, losing two of his fingers, but that did not hamper his energetic efforts and so when the lumber market dropped off, he with his devoted wife, got busy at farming, and he says he has been raising quite a bit of okra this year and finds a good market for it. In fact, I found him in his okra patch when I stopped at his home.

As a matter of suggestion, although Clanton is not so badly infested with mosquitoes, the residents of Clanton could do a great deal of good in killing the pests each summer by each home pouring a quart of kerosene in the commode on certain days. As a signal the city could sound the electric fire siren at a certain hour on a certain day of the week, and residents would then be reminded to pour a small amount of kerosene in the commode and flush the toilet. With all residents cooperating in this, perhaps the most dangerous breeding spot for disease-carrying mosquitoes would be perfectly treated each summer at no great expense to anyone.

There still seems to be some dissatisfaction about the conditions at the county almshouse here, judging from letters being published this week in the News from citizens of the county. What, with continued comments of this kind, are the people to think? There is no doubt that these letters are read in other places than Chilton County, and yet, after the Commissioners Court held its investigation into the state of affairs at the almshouse at a public hearing last month, there still appears to be some unrest about it. However, the matter may be closed so far as the county officials are concerned, but apparently it is not closed so far as citizens are concerned.

The letter from S. M. Edwards, being published in this issue, would possibly lead one to believe that the meeting, or investigation held by the Commissioners Court was a one-sided affair, that the Court had its attorney to act as directed and to secure such statements as were wanted, only, while Mr. Edwards secured statements somewhat to the opposite, so it appears from his letter.

After a person has driven along the Birmingham-Montgomery highway, through Shelby County, then the drive through adjoining counties would seem a pleasure, so far as cows and calves are concerned. It could possibly be something of a sport, or pastime to drive through Shelby County on the Birmingham highway and keep from hitting a cow or calf, or maybe a mule, as there seems to be a surplus in the county, judging from the number seen along the edge of the highway, and some on the highway. And hitting a cow or calf with an automobile, even at a moderate speed, is not a pleasant experience.

A Business Man's Creed for 1931

H. I. Phillips, widely known writer, comes forth with "A Business Man's Creed For 1931"—from which we pass on the following excerpts. This appeared in The Atlanta Journal:

I believe in the United States of America.

I believe in the people of the United States of America.

I believe that somewhere the sun is shining.

I believe that in the long run fair weather overbalances the bad, that the expression "Good old days" is relative and that everything comes out all right in the wash.

I believe that a little optimism never hurt anybody and can be taken straight.

I believe in the capacity of the American industrial leader and in the common sense of the American working man.

I believe that Uncle Sam is still at the old stand with a high heart and a clear head and I do not believe he is in any danger of losing his pants, coat, vest or shirt.

I believe the world is going to continue to revolve in accordance with the generally accepted schedule, Mr. Stalin notwithstanding.

I believe American railroads are worth considerably more than a dime a dozen.

I believe the United States Steel Corporation, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the General Electric Corporation and other big industrial institutions will stay in business and that none of them is in any danger of having to take a side line of lead pencils or apples.

I believe that what the country needs more than anything else is restoration of the ducking stool for professional pessimists, squawkers, calamity howlers and confirmed grouches.

I believe in the ability, instinct. capacity and power of the average American to fight his way out of any difficulty, to scale any reasonable heights, to make the final payments on the automobile, to put something in the bank and to look adversity in the face and tell it to go to hell.

I believe the American people will continue to own and operate automobiles and that there is not a Chinaman's chance that conditions will arise which will make them decide it is a good idea to go back to the bicycle and the buggy.

I believe the old-fashioned washtub has gone for good and that anybody who thinks the American wife is going back to the old days of drudgery and inconveniences is two-thirds cookoo and one-third Army mule.

I believe three square meals a day will always be the American standard, but that even if we miss one or two it won't hurt us.

I believe in common sense and natural vision as opposed to the "fidgets" and the use of smoked glasses when anything goes wrong.

I believe in the silver lining, the rainbow after the storm, the plunge through center, the infallibility of the slogan, "Never lead with your chin," and the potency of the cries, "Block that kick!" and "Hold 'em, Yale!"

I believe the worst is over and that it never was as bad as it was advertised.

"ROUND TOWN"

---by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

Rambling round town these hot summer days is enough to give any old donkey the b. a., pervided he has been eating green apples and drinking a lot of water, but since I haven't been eating green apples nor drinking any great amount of water, I don't suppose I'll get the b. a.

Saturday brought around what I thought would be something of a gas price scrimmage in Clanton, since a new station opened Saturday and selling gasoline at fourteen cents a gallon. But didn't anything much out-of-the-ordinary happen, except some stations just outside the city limits cut down to fourteen cents per gallon, and then I saw some signs up in town about some kind of gas at fourteen cents. Maybe now since somebody has cut, others will cut, but that is certainly one thing I hope they DON'T do, because this business of cutting prices is bad business, if you ask me, and I'm saying so if you don't ask me.

I am going to eat my first piece of watermelon this season about today or tomorrow, because one of my good farmer friends has promised to bring me a nice melon.

I note over on the left in the ed's column that he is suggesting ways and means of helping keep down mosquitoes. That ain't a bad idea if I do say so.

And another thing about this negro communist business over in Dadeville. I noticed in the papers that it is not the better class of that race who are taking part in the rioting, but the lower class. I pay the negroes of Clanton a compliment by saying that I really don't believe they would let some outside person come in here and tell them how to get themselves into trouble by starting trouble, because it looks to me like they ought to know Uncle Sam has got a mighty big army and a whole lot of guns, shells, and hardware stores sell mighty good rope these days too. But the negroes of Clanton know that they have too many friends here who are white people.

Now folks, the Kiwanians are getting down to doing things again. I really don't mean to say 'again,' because they are usually doing things. Was talking to a Clantonian who is also a Kiwanian about the meeting they had over in Maplesville the other night, and there is no question about it, they certainly done some good over there that night. Just think—about seventy-five farmers and other business men all gathered together for a supper to discuss some real cooperation. You fellows over in the Maplesville section are getting right now, so let's keep things rolling and this county will be a shining star in the state. Just mark my words.

* * * *

Walked up one side of the street and down the other, the other day, and saw "Coose" Neighbors just laughing like the very dickens about something. Didn't find out what it was about, but anyway, he is always happy about something. Must have been about Bob Alred, because he looked like he was getting the worst end of the joke, if it was on him, or maybe he was getting too hot, working hard at the drug store.

Glanced in Elmores' nickel and dime store, and that place is forever busy about something, and there's always movement going on inside.

Lande has installed one of those airplane electric fans in the front of his store and it sure does the biz, keeping that store, The Leader, cool all the time. He was remarking the other day that he was way in the back of the store and could feel the wind from the fan.

Matt's Place has put in one of those fans, and the air in that place is kept moving all the time. It was truly a step toward more comfort for patrons of both places.

* * * *

Again Clanton is going to welcome some business men from another larger place. The Selma Kiwanis Club will be in Clanton tonight at six-thirty o'clock to meet with the Clanton Kiwanis Club.

* * * *

Now I've been wondering again about one or six items, maybe. I been wondering if the people here, merchants and all, are going to patronize the new bakery that is going to open here soon. I've been wondering if the merchants and business men here are going to be ready to take advantage of any upturn in business when it comes, and if they realize that it is going to be the fellow who is ready to take this, who is going to come out best in the end.

* * * *

It has always been my policy to try to be at least a quarter of an hour ahead of time in everything I do. But not so long ago I found that when a train is running a quarter hour ahead of time and we get to the place at the same time, it isn't so great, after all.

* * * *

Some fellow asked me the other day if I believed that the fur of a black cat would sparkle when rubbed the wrong way in a dark room. I've never tried it, but I intend to just as soon as I can get hold of a black cat. I got a dark room.

* * * *

Noticed last week that Reedie Taylor was telling about how business had increased at the Chicago Sales Company. Not bad Reedie, just keep telling 'em about it.

* * * *

Did you ever notice that the stores that do the most advertising are the stores that do the most business? Well, think it over. It is just that away, and will always be like that.

* * * *

Calloway Drug Company did some changing around inside their place sometime ago, and it sure helped the looks of things. Made the store look larger and cooler.

Letters To The Editor

IN SYMPATHY WITH HAND'S OPINION ABOUT ALMSHOUSE

Lomax, Ala., July 20, 1931.

Editor Chilton County News:

Just a few lines from this community. Everybody seems to be well and moving around. Rain has been plentiful the past week, and crops are looking fine.

I read Mr. W. T. Hand's article in last week's News with much interest, and am inclined to agree with Mr. Hand. The Almshouse wrangle reminds me of the rich man and Lazarus. We read in Luke, 16th chapter, and beginning at the 19th verse, "There was a certain rich man which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus which was laid at his gate, full of sores. The beggar died and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. The rich man also died and was buried. And in Hell he lifted up his eyes. The rich man asked Abraham to send Lazarus that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and cool his tongue." I hope our commissioners will not become a victim as did the rich man. But it is my opinion they are flirting in that direction.

Now, just a few words to the farmer in regard to farm relief. In 1928 both Mr. Hoover and Mr. Smith had a farm relief plank in their platforms, which stated that the farmer must have relief. And at that time the farmers were getting around $1.40 per bushel for wheat and 17 cents per pound for cotton. Today the farmer is getting less than 55 cents per bushel for his wheat and less than 9 cents for his cotton.

This reminds me of the man who was preparing to be away from home for a while. And before leaving he instructed his wife to be sure and not have anything to do with any clock agent while he was gone. So the man left for his journey. And soon after the man left, a clock agent came in to sell his wife a clock, and the wife told the agent that her husband had instructed her not to buy a clock from an agent while he was gone. So the agent told the wife if she would buy the clock she would not have to pay for it until judgment day. So the wife bought the clock.

By and by the man came home; and the first thing he saw when he came in the house was a clock sitting on the mantle. He said to his wife, "I thought I told you not to buy a clock while I was gone." The wife told her husband that they would not have to pay for it until Judgment Day. The husband said to his wife, "Did you know there are two kinds of Judgment Days?"

I wonder how many farmers have learned by experience that there are two kinds of relief, one spelled "Relief," and one "Relieve." The farmer has been getting the Relieve kind since 1928.

Respectfully,
A. A. JACKSON.

A COMPLIMENT TO MR. HAND; MORE ABOUT ALMSHOUSE

Thorsby, Ala., July 20, 1931.

Dear Editor:

I have been reading the articles of the Hon. W. T. Hand of Jemison, Ala., in regard to the almshouse of Chilton County. I have known Mr. Hand since I first could remember. I have always found him to be a Christian gentleman of the highest type, truthful and upright in every respect. I don't believe he would knowingly misrepresent anything. Tom Hand is not a man who wants to stir up strife and confusion in his county. The only thing he wants in my judgment, is for a man to be true to his trust. I fully believe he is the man who is a friend to the poor and needy, helpless, unfortunate human beings. I have ofttimes heard of his charitable deeds, and by their fruits ye shall know them.

I was present on June 16, 1931, when the so-called hearing was held at the almshouse. Well, it was quite amusing to watch the manouvers of some of the authorities.

Judge L. H. Reynolds was the chairman of the Board. He announced the purpose of the meeting. Commissioner Mims, Mr. John Hayes, and myself asked that Mr. Bean, the keeper, be dismissed from the court while the paupers were giving evidence. Mr. Mims stated to the court that the inmates would not give their testimony as freely in the presence of Mr. Bean as they would in Mr. Bean's absence. Judge Reynolds stoutly objected to this, and there was no vote made on it.

Attorney Pitts arose and announced that he was there to represent Mr. Bean, the keeper. In came the stenographer. Mr. Pitts had full control of that business.

Next, in came Attorney Reynolds for the county, poor old paupers, no attorney for them. All machinery now ready, Judge Reynolds announced that he was now ready for the complaint if there be any. Everybody sat quiet, no one saying anything. Finally I saw it was going too easy, I said to Judge Reynolds I would like to hear a lady inmate testify. His reply was, "Hop out and go get her." I don't know why he used the word hop. I didn't hop out and go get her, at his command. But she was finally brought around. I asked her a few questions concerning Mr. Bean whipping her. She testified that he did whip her severely, and I saw Judge Reynolds was not liking that. When this witness was through with her testimony the judge looked over at me with a heavy frown on his face and said, "Who will you have next, Sam?" I promptly informed him I was not prosecuting the case, so I slowed down and left it with the Judge and Mr. Pitts, and of course Pitts carried things his way. No one can blame Pitts. He is a lawyer to do what he can to save his client, regardless as to how it looks on the other side.

Mr. Jim Mims is to be commended for the splendid hospital building and water works that he had almost completed on that day. This is a move in the right direction, if properly kept by the keeper.

I arrived at the almshouse about nine o'clock that morning and immediately started my rounds to see the inmates and talk with them. I asked them how their treatment was. Most of them told me it was not good. Some told it worse than others. The most of them said they did not get enough to eat and at least six or seven told me they had seen Mr. Bean whip Gip McQueen several times. Dr. Wood testified that their food was sufficient and as good as the average families of the district he practices in. Just how the doctor found out how much folks have to eat in his district I don't know, but that was his testimony. Inmate Allen testified that he had been an inmate for quite a while and that Dr. Wood had never been in the dining hall since he had been an inmate.

Two negro men testified that some of the inmates had come to their house and begged bread at different times and that they had given them something to eat. The Hon. A. A. Jackson testified to practically the same thing and others around the almshouse.

My friends, it takes a hungry man to beg bread, not a well fed man. A dumb brute will beg when he is not hungry. Now if this is what the court is going to call frivolous charges I don't know what they would consider a serious charge. We have a Bible story of Dives and Lazarus. Old Dives waked up in torment and then when old Dives done his begging, but his cries were too late. He had had his day. I am not writing this letter but for one purpose, and that is to let the people know something of how the hearing went off that day. I only have one interest in the almshouse, and that is if we pay taxes to take care of these old people, let us do it right and see to it that they are cared for right. Where there is so much smoke there is compelled to be some fire.

Yours very truly,
S. M. EDWARDS.

THE ART OF MINDING ONE'S OWN BUSINESS

There is nothing that creates so much unhappiness—wrecks so many homes—causes the failure of so many business careers as does that ever present human trait of attending to the other fellows' business. We have all often heard that women were the worst gossipers in the world, but believe me the women can't hold a candle to the men. Naturally men don't think they are gossiping just because they simply mention to a friend that Bill Jones was "loaded" last night, or that they saw Mrs. Jones smoke a cigarette. Now don't misunderstand me to mean that I approve of drinking or disapprove of it—that I approve or disapprove of women smoking. It is not my intention in this article to express my personal opinion of certain vices and habits. Actually I do have my own ideas about what one should and should not do—but whatever I think, which of course is my business, I keep to myself if I have to use someone's name to make my view clear. Isn't it a fact that when you find someone criticizing some other poor devil for what he is doing that ninety-nine chances out of a hundred this same fellow is either doing the same thing himself or perhaps something worse. Were I selecting a man for a position I would look first for a man who could keep his nose out of the other fellow's business, because if he was endowed with that one asset, you could pretty well depend on him for other requirements. There is nothing that will bring more happiness and self-satisfaction than loving your fellow man. Don't be too quick to judge a man—look at him as a human being with a heart perhaps better than your own—with human weaknesses which enmesh him as they would you, perhaps, had you been placed in his environments and circumstances. All of us can't be as perfect as you may be pretending to be. If a man owes money for groceries, etc., don't go around telling everyone about it—that isn't your business. Credit associations take care of those things, that's their business. If he owes you and can pay and won't, tell your lawyer to collect it—that's his business. If he is down and out and can't pay, give him a pat on the back and tell him you have confidence in him and that you know he will pay when he can—and then bet your bottom dollar on him, for brother, you will get your money. Try this experiment for a week—don't say anything evil about the other fellow and see if you don't feel like you have gone out early in the morning and filled your lungs with good fresh air.

ORR-PITTS WEDDING WAS PRETTY EVENT OF THURS.

Miss Elie Merle Pitts, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elie Braxton Pitts, became the bride of William Grey Orr Thursday evening at seven o'clock at the Fairfield Methodist Church, the Rev. Foster K. Gamble reading the nuptial vows in the presence of a large assemblage of guests.

The entire front of the church was banked with a profusion of Southern smilax and plumosa ferns, interspersed with pink gladioli and gypsophilia, while numerous standards of candelabra furnished light for the ceremony. Similar standards, tied with satin ribbon and decorated with gladioli and intimate friends of the couple.

The candles were lighted by Edward Pitts, brother of the bride, and D. W. Dobbins, who also acted as ushers.

Preceding the ceremony Mrs. Marjorie Moran Carpenter rendered a group of love lyrics. Kenneth Griffin and Miss Madelyn Orr, sister of the bridegroom, sang selections.

The junior bridesmaids, Misses Jane Elizabeth Ardis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Ardis,, and Betty Jean Tubb, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Proctor V. Tubb, nieces of the bride, entered first. Their dresses of blue net were of colonial style, tight bodices with ruffled skirts reaching the floor. Bands of blue ribbon bound their hair and they wore flesh tinted slippers and carried French bouquets.

The maid of honor, Miss Evelyn Meacham, cousin of the bride, came next wearing a gown of similar blue net over blue taffeta made colonial style, with sash of flesh velvet tied in front with streamers to the floor. Her arm bouquet was of pink roses and baby breath tied with flesh tulle.

Little Francis Leon Williams, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Leon Williams, carried the ring on a pillow of hand-painted flesh satin, the same having been carried on former occasions at the marriages of two sisters of the bride. The ring-bearer's suit was of flesh satin with flesh slippers to match.

Preceding the bride came little Ann Self, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Self, flower girl. She was dressed in flesh net with ruffled skirt and tight bodice with yoke. Her sash and and hair band were of flesh ribbon. She carried rose petals in a colonial bonnet of ruffled net.

The bride entered with her father, who gave her in marriage. Her bridal gown was of flesh Chantilly lace over flesh taffeta, fashioned along princess lines, flaring at the knees and touching the floor. Long tight-fitting sleeves and draped neck marked the bodice. Her veil of cream tulle was attached to a cap of Chantilly lace with clusters of orange blossoms at each side. Her only ornament was a string of pearls. The bridal bouquet was of cream Killarney roses showered with lilies of the valley. Mr. Orr was attended by Kenneth Matthews.

Immediately following the wedding the bride's parents entertained with a reception at their home on Parkway.

The receiving line was composed of Mr. and Mrs. Pitts. Mrs. R. M. Orr, mother of the bridegroom; Mrs. J. M. Cooley and Mrs. Lloyd Riddell. Mrs. Pitts received in a gown of blue chiffon, having a shoulder corsage of pink roses. Mrs. Orr wore black chiffon with gardenias. The table was covered with Venetian lace. The bridal cake was ring-shaped embossed with roses, orange blossoms and lilies of the valley, a bouquet of roses, intermingled with fern and gypsophelia, filling the center. Pink tapers burned on either side in silver holders. Ices and mints were in keeping with the color scheme of blue and pink. Assisting in the dining room were Mesdames James H. Ardis, Proctor V. Tubb, T. W. Elliott and James Leon Williams. Mrs. Marjorie Moran Carpenter registered the names of the guests in the bride's book. Later in the evening the young couple left on their wedding trip to Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain and other points in Tennessee.

Out-of-town guests to the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Cooley, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Riddell, of Dallas, Texas; Mrs. R. M. Orr and Miss Madelyn Orr, of Clanton, Ala., and Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Harrison, of Guin, Ala.

Mrs. Orr, as Miss Pitts, was educated in Birmingham and is a popular member of the younger set.

Mr. Orr, only son of Mrs. M. R. Orr, of Clanton, received his education at Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn and is a member of the S. A. E. Fraternity. He is connected with the Firestone Service Stores of this city.

After the wedding journey, Mr. and Mrs. Orr will be at home in English Village at Mountain Brook.

40 PER CENT MORE SWEET POTATOES ARE PLANTED

Alabama sweet potato acreage was increased by 40 per cent this year compared with 1930 giving a total of 104,000 against 74,000 last year, reports F. W. Gist, agricultural statistician for the Department of Agriculture.

The condition on July 1 was 60 per cent, indicating a production of 8,320,000 bushels, compared with 6,290,000 last season. "If this prospect continues there will be a problem of marketing a considerable surplus, or feeding to hogs," he said.

Buy a new refrigerator now

Now, if ever, is the time for you to buy a new ice refrigerator. Get rid of that dilapidated, unsanitary, and unreliable ice box and buy one of the new scientifically built refrigerators for sale by the firms listed below.

The merchants of Clanton have made the first move. They have done their share and it is up to you to act now. Prices have been slashed right and left. In some cases they have been cut almost in half. Never before in the history of ice refrigeration have prices been so low and valued so high.

Take advantage of the tremendous savings which the merchants of Clanton have made possible for you. These refrigerators are new and modern in every respect. They are built along the latest style lines and are attractive and sanitary. Will you take advantage of this wonderful opportunity today or will you wait and regret it when you have to pay more.

Use More Ice

Safeguard the health of your family. During these hot summer days the preservation of your food in the right manner is one of the prime factors in keeping your family healthy. Hot food spoils very quickly, but food kept at a cold, even temperature with ice will stay fresh for a long time. Ice refrigeration is the road to follow when trying to solve the summer refrigeration problem. Should you buy one of the refrigerators listed above before August the first you will receive delivered free of charge enough ice to fill its capacity.

IRISH POTATO ACREAGE INCREASED 50 PER CENT

Alabama farmers this year increased their Irish potato acreage by 50 per cent, the total being 48,000 acres compared with 31,000 last year. The yield has been good, averaging above 90 bushels and producing a total of 4,384,000 bushels compared with 2,521,000 last year. Most of the commercial crop has already moved to market at rather disappointing prices, but the main production has been for home use.

ALABAMA HAS LARGEST CORN ACREAGE IN YEARS

The Alabama acreage planted to corn this year was 3,091,000, compared with 2,810,000 last year, which is the largest acreage planted to corn in a number of years, according to F. W. Gist, state and federal statistician for the Departments of Agriculture.

Conditions of the corn crop on July 1 was reported as 70 per cent of normal, which indicates a total production of 38,683,000 bushels, or an average of 12.5 bushels per acre. This compares with a total production last year of 29,501,000 bushels, an average of 10.5 per acre.

ELECTRIFY Your Kitchen Increase Your Profits

Every hotel and restaurant operator knows that his prosperity is keyed by the success of the kitchen. The reputation for good food travels fast. The reputation for not serving good food travels even faster. Experience of hotels and restaurants throughout the country is now proving that electrically cooked food draws customers and increases profits. Add to this the many other outstanding advantages—no fuel handling; no fumes or odors; the minimum of attendance; never failing conveniences; less food shrinkage and spoilage; elasticity of temperature control; uniform results—and here in Alabama an unusually low electric rate for heavy duty equipment. Can you afford not to give your guests this service—or at least to learn more about it? Our engineers will study your requirements without charge or obligation. CULPEPPER HOME COVERED WITH ATTRACTIVE ROOF

Persons driving from the business section of town out to West End will no doubt notice the new roof recently placed on the Frank Culpepper home, and admire its uniqueness and attractiveness. This roof was placed on by the Becker Roofing Company of Montgomery, and purchased by Luther Culpepper.

In a statement from Harry L. Slingluff, manager of the roofing company, he said, "We take pride in this roof, as we manufacturer it, sell it and do the work of covering homes, ourselves. This roof is known as the Becker Bonded Roof, and is strictly fire proof. Mr. Culpepper is to be congratulated on having his home covered with this roof in this time of fire hazards."

It is understood that this roofing company is contemplating establishing a branch agency in Clanton sometime in the near future, as they stated they have already completed several jobs in the county and have prospects of more. The job on the Culpepper home was under supervision of J. D. Kelly, an experienced roofing man, who is with the Becker Roofing Company.

WEST END ADDS ANOTHER NEW PLACE OF BUSINESS

What seems to be ringing true concerning West End coming back into the old days again when it was a hustling little addition to Clanton in the way of business, another new place is opening out there.

This time it is a garage for general automobile repairing, and will be under the management of Grady Taylor, who also operates the West End Grocery. In connection with this repair shop, there is expected to be a welding department. That in itself will be something unusual for West End. Harris Hardy, son of J. R. Hardy, who operates a general merchandise store in West End also, has recently completed his studies on welding and associated repair work will probably place machinery for this particular line, in the garage, which will be known as the West End Garage.

The West End Garage will be housed in a recently erected building between the store of J. R. Hardy and the West End Grocery, and at this time it is open, with a mechanic on the job ready for business.

structor at the Isabella High School, who called on various farmers and merchants who had had experience in the past year in growing and marketing strawberries. Those called on told in a rather impressive manner how the money derived from strawberries in the past year had aided them greatly in meeting financial obligations, and one farmer told of how he was able to send his son through college solely from the sale of strawberries. Others spoke of the small amount of work necessary to grow berries.

Cohen E. Stapp, Kiwanian and County Agent of Chilton County was asked to give the meeting some figures on the marketing of berries during the past season recently closed here. Mr. Stapp pointed out that it was the sale of strawberries that aided the central section of the county to pass through an otherwise hard year. At present there are only three strawberry shipping points in the county, Clanton, Thorsby and Jemison. The crop of this year brought near $150,000.00 in cash to this county, the larger part of which went to the section around Thorsby. Mr. Stapp also gave some information concerning individual planters and the amounts of actual cash netted by each, above all expenses.

At this point the meeting began to take on more interest and instead of the time previously estimated for the meeting, it was found necessary to double that. Dut to the fact that the meeting was held purposely to create a better understanding between the farmers and business men of the Maplesville section and to create more interest in strawberry growing, and the organizing of a shipping point, the chairman asked that another meeting of the farmers be held in the very near future for the purpose of furthering plans along that line. A suggestion was made that another meeting be held on August 15. C. E. Stapp was named to select a committee right away to arrange for this meeting and to promote the work. This committee will probably be named this week and will be composed of farmers and business men of the Maplesville section.

Howard R. Oden, one of the recognized progressive farmers of the Isabella section, in this county, was called on to give some facts and data concerning his experiences on planting vetch and peas as winter cover crops.

Maplesville has never organized a shipping point for its farm products, and has some splendid advantages for this, being the larger of the towns in the western part of the county and located on two railroads and a through state highway. The citizenship of Maplesville is made up of progressive business men and planters, and much interest was stimulated as the result of the gathering Thursday night through the efforts of the Clanton Kiwanis Club.

The ladies of the Maplesville Parent-Teacher Association served in an elaborate manner the delicious food for the meeting at the expense of the Kiwanis Club and a rising vote of thanks from the eighty-odd men was given to the ladies for their splendid work in connection with the meeting. Erle Thomas arranged for a group of string musicians to furnish music, and the entire affair went over and will remain in the minds of those attending as a complete success.

SITES IN CO. NOT SUITABLE FOR HATCHERY

1,000 Gallons Per Minute Is Needed To Start Fish Hatchery, Report

Although Chilton County is able to present several available sites necessary to take care of the large $50,000 fish hatchery of the government so far as acreage is concerned, there is not a flowing spring of water in the county with a capacity large enough to supply the necessary amount for the hatchery, according to a report made by Mr. Wyatt, a representative of the Federal Government Bureau of Fisheries, who was in Chilton County Thursday of last week inspecting proposed sites for the hatchery.

Following a public meeting held at the courthouse in Clanton recently, several sites were proposed for the hatchery which the government plans to spend $50,000 on. These numerous sites were culled down until about three or four were selected as being somewhere near according to the specifications of the government.

These sites were visited by the Commissioners Court and then visited again by the Government representative. The report stated that there were two sites, one near Calera and one just east of Jemison that were as near being what was wanted as any in the county, but the springs located on them were not supplying a sufficient number of gallons of water per minute as is necessary. Mr. Wyatt stated that it would take a spring with a capacity of one thousand gallons per minute, while the springs located here ranged from 400 to 600 gallons per minute.

McCormack, Held As Slayer, Freed

The slaying of John Ed Bearden at Maplesville, Ala., in 1922, Friday morning was relegated to an inactive page of the court records after members of the slain man's family agreed the prisoner held as Milton McCormack, wanted for the slaying, was Milton's brother, Dalton McCormack. He was released.

For 24 hours the community around Maplesville and in Chilton County buzzed as word spread that Milton McCormack had been recognized in a courtroom in Louisville, Miss., where he was standing trial for a minor offense, and had been returned to Alabama to face trial for the slaying of Bearden.

Six relatives of the slain man and several relatives of the prisoner, including two brothers, declared the prisoner was Dalton McCormack, and not Milton.

They said Dalton nine years ago was a youth of 14 and the man wanted in connection with the slaying was at the time of the shooting about 20.

Among those who viewed the prisoner were Miss Ollie Bearden, daughter of the slain man, who knew Milton McCormack well, and who was once reported to be the sweetheart of the man wanted. She definitely said the man held was Dalton McCormack.

Others who identified the prisoner were Walter and Earnest McCormick, brothers of Dalton and Milton, Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Moore, cousins of the man wanted and Miss Ollie Mae Moore.

Sees Newspaper As Important Factor In Prosperity's Return

Mr. Charles Presbrey Says Press Seldom Errs In Selection of News and That Advertising Moves Money

MR. CHARLES PRESBREY

President, Frank Presbrey Company, New York Advertising Agency, who states that newspapers will be an important factor in the return of normal business conditions.

Newspapers will be a strong factor in bringing about the return of prosperity, according to Mr. Charles Presbrey, President of the Frank Presbrey Company, advertising agency of New York. They record a community's activities and therefore encourage prosperity by making known the first symptoms of it. Editorially, they promote the policies of government and business administration which will hasten the return of good times. And through their advertising columns, they cause the spending of money—one of the most necessary steps to normal business conditions.

"Many people criticize the newspaptrs for giving too much prominence to the news of the break in the stock market in October, 1929," stated Mr. Presbrey, "and this was supposed to have spread the pessimism that soon brought about the depression. I do not give such theory any great amount of credit—the losses in the market themselves were sufficient to curtail the buying power of thousands of individuals and the earnings of many corporations. A newspaper's function is to disseminate news, and to feature it in the order of its importance from an interest standpoint. This same policy of the successful newspaper will make it a tremendous ally of good times.

Editors Make Few Mistakes

"In every community there is a factor which is taken locally as an index to business conditions. In a small town, perhaps it's the local 'mill' or factory where return to production is

THE HUMAN MACHINE

Every prudent person who owns and operates a piece of machinery is careful to see that it is kept in good condition. This is generally done through frequent inspections to detect unusual wear and tear, so as to have the necessary repairs made before the machine actually breaks down.

The most important piece of machinery of all, however, is often sadly neglected. We refer to the human body, the machine upon which all joy of living depends.

It is well that people are more and more getting the habit of having periodical physical examinations, even though they be apparently in good health. By these examinations incipient disease may often be detected long before the person examined would have felt any discomfort from it. This is particularly true of diseases which attack the internal organs such as the heart, lungs, liver and kidneys.

Every person, especially those getting along toward middle age, should have a thorough physical examination at least once a year, whether they feel any symptoms of disease or not. If no disease be found, it is a great satisfaction to know that one is sound physically, while a warning of disease in its first stages enables one to obtain treatment which may check its progress and materially prolong life.

Most large life insurance companies now afford their policy holders free medical examinations once a year and this privilege should be taken advantage of by all means. If no insurance policy be carried, the fee for such an examination is small and may save much suffering and expense in the future. Watch your human machine.

COTTON PRICE IS ABOUT SAME AS 100 YEARS AGO

Cotton prices are about the same as they were 100 years ago, reports the radio and market division of the Alabama Department of Agriculture.

According to the United States Bureau of Census upland cotton prices in 1831, 100 years ago, averaged 9.4 cents per pound. This is not far off the average price at the ten spot markets during the first six months of this year.

Bureau statistics also show that in 1930 the average price of upland cotton was 9.5 cents per pound compared with the average of 9.7 cents in 1830. This shows that 100 years ago cotton averaged .2 cents per pound higher than it did last year.

During the past 100 years the high average price was in 1863 when cotton averaged 101.5 cents per pound. The lowest average for any year was in 1898 when cotton averaged 4.9 cents per pound.

WOMEN HAVE THEIR WAY

American women scored a victory over officialdom recently, when custom authorities in Washington decreed that returning tourists might bring back as much as a hundred dollars worth of their favorite perfume, instead of only the single bottle formerly permitted.

Perfumes have been brought from one country into another since ancient times. Roses imported into France from Syria in the Middle Ages were used to make rose water. Italian perfumes were brought into France during the Renaissance. During the reign of Louis XV the aristocratic members of society required a different perfume every day. The industry declined during and immediately after the French Revolution, but was revived under Josephine, wife of Napoleon.

It was only natural that France should attain preeminence in the art of perfumery. Southern France produces a luxuriance of fragrant flowers equalled by no other country, and French colonies furnish the essential oils and other necessary ingredients.

Perfumery manufacture in France is a combination of science, exquisite taste and tradition, and not the least element in the manufacturers' success is the artistic blending of natural essences. Even the perfume bottles and boxes are fashioned with delicate care, so that the finished product is as appealing to the eye as it is to the most fastidious nose.

W. R. Orchard, editor of the Council Bluffs (Iowa) Nonpareil, says:

That the enormous value of advertising is not recognized and appreciated by the people generally. It is the great central motor which moves the wheels of progress forward. All people have hopes, ambitions, desires. They crave those things which make life more worth living. They are in search constantly of better food, better clothing, better homes, better environment. In the advertisements written by people highly educated in this important art they find the answers to their longings.

An old farmer and his wife concluded to sell their farm and move elsewhere. They were tired of the humdrum of farming. They consulted a live real estate dealer. This man gladly listed their farm and wrote an advertisement setting forth the facts regarding its fertile acres, its shady groves, its fine old house, its springs of ice cold water, its pastures, its shady lanes, its lowing cattle and the good neighborhood in which it was located. The old farmer and his wife read this fine description of their property and concluded that they would keep it. Advertising written by a skilled hand made them appreciate the value of their property. They saw it in a new light.

Railroads employ skilled writers to paint word pictures of the beautiful scenery which may be reached on their lines. They appeal in this manner to human desires and get business. It is the money of travelers which furnishes employment to millions of people who provide them with their traveling needs.

Advertising induces people to buy. It causes our dollars to move rapidly. A dollar which changes hands ten times in a day and repeats day after day for a year is worth 3,650 times more than another dollar held in the strong box of a miser who hoards his money and denies himself the improved living conditions he should buy.

Our standards of living and our wages per capita are the highest and best in the world. We have grown rich by buying and selling among ourselves. There are no saturation points in this country for useful commodities and foods. The wants of people are insatiable. Keep these wants alive by advertising and volume of business will increase as surely as tides rise and fall.

Mrs. James Bennon of St. Louis, who reported the disappearance of her husband three months ago, found him living with another woman two doors away.

D. W. Haskew

I was talking with a good woman not long since who could not attend church on the account of bodily ailments. This is what she said to me, "Pastor, I long to be at church every Sunday, but I am now too feeble to go. I want you to know that while I can not sit in my pew, still I am with you in my spirit." The spirit of that woman was a blessing to the pastor and the church at every service. Allow me to tell you what an Evangelist said to a business man who came to him saying, "Brother, I have got to open my business for trade every day during your meeting and I will have to be there, but I want you to know that my spirit will be here with you." The Evangelist looked him over and while seeing more than the business man had an idea could be seen, he made this reply, "Brother, if you think more of your business than you do of your soul, if you think more of your business than you do of the souls of your neighbors, you keep your spirit where your body is. We do not want it here pestering our worship." A lot of people think that they can deceive the ministry. A man will go, and he will be found doing the thing that he treasures most. No man can send his spirit off to worship, while his body and brain go off after pleasure or business.

Dr. J. C. James, who is now presiding elder of the Montgomery district, was one day walking through the cotton field of one. of his members. He was young in the ministry and having been raised in the city, he knew nothing at all about cotton. However, he wished to be friendly toward his host and to show interest in his promising crop. The minister ventured to make the following comment, "Brother Warren, I notice that you have two kinds of cotton growing in your field, one kind that has a white bloom and one kind that has a red bloom. May I ask which kind you like the better." Then the city preacher let the cat out of the wallet. It is amusing to witness how wise some city youngsters think themselves to be when they are standing side by side with a country boy. There are many of the linen suit quality who do not even know how to tie a hamestring. It would be a sight worth going to London to see, just to witness one of these "Know it alls" hitch a mule to a plow. I really believe that a country boy knows more of the things worth knowing, than does the city boy.

I was sitting on my front porch and a man went by with his head hanging down. His entire bodily appearance indicated to me that he was in the dumps. There were burdens in his bosom that I could not see. I could read from his every movement that he was almost ready to throw up the sponge and quit. He said to the world about him by his very movements, "I am down and out." He had met a problem, he had met a hard climb, and he was saying, "What is the use to try?" When a man loses hope, he has lost the power to succeed Unless a soldier holds up his head, he is not going to fight. This is a time when we must refuse to let our heads droop. This is a time when we must hold up our heads and keep our spirits up. Things may not be just as you would like for them to be, but you will get no where by moping. Hold up your head and you will have power to fight it through.

A handsome young man and a beautiful young lady stood before me asking that I say the words that would make them man and wife. I did not ask them if they knew all the joys, all the sacrifices, all the troubles, all the sorrows that awaited them down the journey of life? I only asked them if they would accept each other according to the marriage vows to live together and to be true to each other until death separated them. I could see from the joy with which they answered the questions that they loved each other, and that they were ready, willing and anxious to take each other and because of that love to take by faith all that life might bring to them. Marriage is a venture of faith. If the venture is made under the urge and under the power of love, the two parties will be willing to suffer much and to sacrifice much. They will take by faith the problems of married life and with trust and faith, love them through. When there is loyalty, trust, faith and love, the vows of the sacred altar of matrimony will never be disgraced in the divorce courts.

A good friend asked me this question, "What do you consider the most dangerous period of human life?" I wanted to tell him that the most dangerous period was the days of childhood. I wanted to tell him that the most dangerous time was the days of young manhood and womanhood. My answer to that question was that I considered the most dangerous period in human life to be between the age of thirty and forty-five. During that time married people lose the fascination of love and loyalty, and stand in eminent danger of breaking over the vows of wedlock. During that period there comes the increase of responsibility and the burdens of business, and the soul is gripped by material things, and stands in eminent danger of becoming money and pleasure mad. Between the ages of thirty and forty-five is the time when the real fight of life must be made. Men and women should be on their guard with all the gattling guns of honor and purity, ready to be used in defense of the soul. Beware lest you lose your virtue and your religious faith between thirty and forty-five.

NEW DEVICE TRANSFORMS MUSIC INTO COLOR

Now You Can See Color of Your Own Voice, Says Radio Engineer

The development of a marvellous color organ which automatically converts music into changing colors in harmony with the moods expressed by the music, and which can be used to project the human voice in color on a screen, was described by Mr. E. B. Patterson, research engineer of the RCA Victor Company.

The color organ, which operates on radio-electrical principles, was developed in the vast radio laboratories concentrated in Camden, New Jersey, by RCA Victor. It is designed to produce a greater emotional effect on the spectator-listener than can be obtained by listening to music alone. It has long been known, Mr. Patterson said, that color affects human emotion in much the same way that certain moods in music do. The color organ endeavors to make a simultaneous appeal to both senses, of sight and sound, for greater aesthetic enjoyment.

Visualizing its application to the stage, or the concert hall, Mr. Patterson described the operation of the color organ in conjunction with the performance of a "blues" singer. The singer's voice picked up by a microphone connected to the color device automatically creates a colorful background of appropriate atmosphere which changes with the fluctuations of his voice. Another application of the color device is to fountains, where in addition to creating pleasing lighting effects, it will be possible to control water valves so that the flow of water is varied with the changing tempo of the music.

IN CONCLUSION

We Say To You

Ice is an invaluable aid to you during the hot summer weather in keeping your food pure and free of germs. With improper refrigeration there is always danger of food becoming contaminated and poisoning your family. The use of ice refrigeration removes this worry from your mind. There's no substitute for melting ice in keeping food cold, moist and pure. The use of more ice is the key to your refrigeration problem.

During the past two months the Clanton Ice Company and the hardware concerns of Clanton have sponsored a campaign thru the medium of this newspaper to bring to your attention the necessity of using more ice. They have given you good advice and stand ready to help you with your refrigeration problems.

Use More Ice

It is up to you to act now. The price on refrigerators has never been as low as it is now. The dealers in Clanton have slashed the price on modern, scientifically built refrigerators and if you buy now you can save many dollars.

In drawing this campaign to a close we advise you to buy one of these new refrigerators, now, while prices are so low. These refrigerators will serve you faithfully for years to come, with you as its sole boss at all times.

Our Improved Crops

Several days ago, the outlook for some good crops in the county was not so good, as complaint of dry weather was heard from various parts of the county. But the all-seeing One has blessed the county with rain during recent days and especially the latter part of last week. Reports from over the county state that crops in general are looking fine and growing like a top. Indications point toward a fine crop this year and farmers will be fixed so far as food crops are concerned.

The low price of cotton is perhaps a blessing in disguise, and as Mack Wyatt would have it, "If it stays cheap we will get rich." That simply means that our farmers will not depend too heavily on cotton for a livelihood, but devote more time to crops they can use at home, and cut down on fertilizer bills by planting their own legumes

Editors See Gains

The editors of 155 business papers announced through the National Conference of Business paper editors, that they see distinct signs of business improvement. This is a testimony that should comfort the doubters and pessimists, if they want to be comforted. Business paper editors come nearer knowing the real heart of trade than almost anyone else.

While the theorists are theorizing and the statisticians are computing figures that in many cases represent the past rather than the present, the business paper fellows are in close touch with the conditions of today in every branch of trade. They have their ears very close to the commercial ground. Like the old Indians bending over to listen for the hoofbeats of approaching forces, these editors hear the tramplings of the faster march of activity.

Performing A Great Work

Some of the women's clubs of Alabama are undertaking to have the litter of bill boards and advertising signs removed from the highways of the state. Here is hoping they succeed. The removal of such bill boards and advertising signs would not only afford an opportunity to see Alabama beautifully, some of the advertising they contain might find its way into the state press, where the reader could sit around the fireside or on the porch swing and read and study the advertising in comfort.

We have always contended that such advertising is an unfair discrimination against the press. The press is the real advertising medium and community builder after all is said and done. The gratuitius work the press does entitles it to the advertising that is done on bill boards, trees and buildings. If the women's clubs of the state can succeed in accomplishing the undertaking the press of Alabama ought to erect a monument to their memory.

No Advice Needed

Three hundred thousand members of the proletarian organization of Germany demand the release of the eight negroes now confined in Kilby Prison, who are under sentence of death for criminally assaulting two young white women in Jackson County last Spring, Gov. Miller was informed in a cablegram from Berlin.

This following close on the heels of President Hoover's proposal of a moratorium of their war debt, doesn't sound so good to the red-blooded Americans, who have suffered so much at the hands of this people through loss of life and health from a war into which they were unwillingly dragged. Not many of us care to have any suggestions from the Germans as to our private affairs.

"Perceive the death sentence against negro youth as an unquenchable civilization disgrace," do they?

Well, when they want to try to force their style of civilization on us again, let 'em remember their last attack. Better finish paying the debt contracted then.

"Raise flaming protest. Demand setting free." That's the way they express it. To h—ll with 'em, we say. We've not asked their advice. Don't need it, and feel that we are entirely capable of handling our own affairs without any outside interference.

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

"I am not bound to win but I am bound to be true. I am not bound to succeed but I am bound to live up to what right I have. I must stand by anybody that stands right—stand with him while he is right and part with him when he goes wrong."—A. Lincoln.

Speaking of life's most happy moments, here's one, often read about but never experienced. When you go into a store on the first of the month to pay a bill and the merchant says, "Oh, that's all right, just wait another thirty days.

This idea of blithely dashing into a railroad train isn't the sport it used to be. I heard the other day of a court in Vermont who directed a motorist to pay a railroad company $19.60 for damage inflicted upon a locomotive into which said motorist dashed, slashed, crashed, hurtled, ran, collided, bumped and otherwise assailed to the detriment of the paint, varnish, finish, polish, appearance, efficiency, utility and otherwise usefulness of said locomotive, engine and vehicle of propulsion and at said highway crossing where said motorist committed said breach upon the property of the plaintiff.

There is a fellow, I understand who is somewhat peeved at himself because he failed to notice in the News a week or so ago, that he had an invitation to eat at Matt's Lunch Shoppe as their special guest. You folks better take to looking for the invitations to eat a well prepared dinner at Matt's and at the Dixie. These invitations are in the News each week.

Heard a good story the other day, and passing it on to you. A man in southern Minnesota, tired of life, out of work, walked a mile and a half to the railroad, laid down with his neck over the rail. The train was late. The man finally wore out, walked back to town and wrote the general freight agent complaining of the poor service of the railroad. Some persons are never satisfied.

I extend a hand of welcome, as the ed says, to the writer of the column "As Seen" that appeared for the first time in the News last week.

And to the dainty little correspondent of the Mulberry community, I will say that it really doesn't make any difference whether I'm a preacher or not, I sure like watermelons, chicken, cantaloupes, peaches, and what have you. But the ed didn't like it much cause you spoke of me as an ed, last week. Next time you are in Clanton look me up.

There is a man who has done much toward contributing to the raising of the working class of people. He has no doubt spent years of real hard work. There is a possibility that he started in life undernourished and without an education. He is striving at all times to better his condition and to aid in a better way toward the raising of the working people. He is the man who makes alarm clocks.

* * * *

It is said when the Great Creator had finished His work of making all the good things. He found there was still some dirty work to do. So He made the reptiles, beasts and the poisonous insects, and after He had finished this job, He still had some old scraps left on hand that were too bad to put into the hyena, the rattlesnake, the scorpion, and the skunk, so He gathered all these together, covered them with suspicion, wrapped it with jealousy, marked it with a yellow streak and called it a KNOCKER. This outcome was so fearful that He had to make something to counteract it. So, He took a sunbeam, put it into the heart of a child, took the brain of man, wrapped it with civic pride, covered it with brotherly love, made it a believer in equality, and justice, a worker for and a supporter for every good thing in the community, and then called that product a BOOSTER. And henceforth mortal man has had the privilege of choosing his associates.

And I am inclined to believe sometimes that the biggest fool in town can sometimes tell the wisest man in town something he did not know.

And then someone suggests that the only way to drive a car is to bear in mind that the other fellow is an idiot and needs watching.

About all some people are fit for is to kick about something the other fellow has done or failed to do. They seem to forget that most any ordinary mule can kick.

Sees Newspapers As Big Factor, Prosperity's Return

regarded as significant. In the larger town, it may be a reduction in unemployment—or an encouraging rise in bank clearings.

"Newspapers bring these facts to the public quickly. In these days they are news. Corporations earning their dividends a few years ago were no sources of news—they were normal and their earnings were taken for granted. Now the most space-guarding editor is pleased to lead out a story of an increased dividend, or an extra, when paid by even a comparatively unimportant corporation. Editors are not deceiving their readers in this—they are giving a proper balance to their news—and in doing this, helping to stabilize business conditions.

"The average newspaper today is a leader of its readers. A man usually reads the paper he believes and whose ideas he is ready to accept. Thus, the editorial writer finds his pen a stronger weapon than ever.

"Without discussing the harm or value of certain government activities, or regulation of business, I believe the newspaper can serve its communities' industries by wielding its influence in their behalf. Political science writers are doing much to overcome the fear of government programs which are holding back many businesses.

All Departments Help

"The business side of a newspaper is just as valuable a means to the return of good times as is the editorial department, however. Their redoubled efforts in obtaining advertising revenue is helping their communities as well as themselves—and the advertisers.

"Enormous savings in bank deposits alone show a latent buying power which promises adequate return for good advertising. Advertisers are naturally reluctant to spend their money in idle markets. The energetic business staff is unlocking these appropriations and through successful campaigns, increasing the business of the advertiser. This business cannot increase, however, without putting money into circulation.

"Retail store advertising benefits, not only the businesses themselves, but the manufacturers whose goods they sell. The manufacturer's advertising for his particular products helps himself, of course, but even more, it helps the retail and wholesale outlets through which the product is distributed. Employment is increased or lay offs or wage reductions minimized. The finished goods must be transported to the market.

From Good Markets Now

"Even the newspapers' circulation department can be helpful in restoring good times. Forced methods of boosting totals are not only costly but wasteful. Requiring a proper advertising rate, they add to the cost of advertising without increasing its effectiveness. They lower the average of the value of a newspaper's readers. They are an economic waste. By keeping its circulation expansion confined to those new readers who are voluntary subscribers and who represent a purchasing influence, the newspaper is further aiding the return to sound business conditions."

"As advertising agents we are very much aware of the sales problems of our clients, most of whom are eager to utilize advertising wherever it can be shown that the expenditure will be productive. Our department of business research is constantly studying business conditions, not only nationally, but in various localities.

"Some areas will return to normalcy before others, many are already good markets for certain products. It is our duty to point out to our clients those points which are apt to be the most responsive to advertising in the light of business conditions and the strength and influence of the newspaper in that market.

"The manufacturer who has let his advertising lapse, and the producer of a new product are not apt to start their advertising in a national way on a large scale. They will first select specific areas that seem to be most responsive. Zone advertising will increase in popularity because it permits the selection of productive areas—skimming the cream as it were—with new 'cream' areas coming into the picture every day as prosperity returns. Newspapers who show their markets as being in the preferred class will find many advertisers now ready to make an investment in their advertising columns."

Last Week's News Reviewed By A Stranger in The Windy City

Chicago, Ill., July 21.—Hello, Clanton folks! You didn't know it, but I've been looking at you, viewing you as you were reflected in the columns of last week's Chilton County News. You'd be surprised to know what a faithful mirror of your community I found this good newspaper to be.

o

Before going a single line farther, we'll settle one thing so that it need never be mentioned again. None of you know me. I've never been in Clanton, and there isn't a chance in ten thousand that you've ever seen me. I'm just an odd piece of humanity that's been tossed about on life's sea for quite a spell. Now I find my keenest pleasure in reading the good weekly newspapers that come to my desk. Such papers as the Chilton County News are ever so much closer to the lives of their readers than the metropolitan sheets.

A hand of welcome to the little lads who so recently arrived to brighten the E. E. Overstreet home of Billingsley, and the Gresham Lowery home of Thorsby. Some years hence, when they read the accounts of their weddings in the News what other items do you suppose will greet their eyes? What wars will have been fought; who will have wedded and who will have died; who will be in Congress then, and will they still be arguing about prohibition and the tariff; what will be the most popular means of transportation in that day? I could lose myself in such speculation.

After wading through a welter of domestic unhappiness with its consequent breaking up of families, such as I do each week in the daily press, it is like inhaling a berath of pure country air to read of the reunion which recently took place when Mrs. Carl Peterson of Birmingham visited her sisters, Mrs. James Bosworth, Mrs. A. E. Reagan and Mrs. C. R. Foss. Such family visits are an encouraging sign; for, after all, the family is the foundation of our nation. Where family ties are strong, governments prosper. But where they weaken or dissolve, civilizations decay.

In the calendar of events, future historians will record last week of importance for this, that, or the other thing. But to the friends of Miss Willo Dean Bean of Thorsby, it was important for one thing only. . . . the anniversary of her birth. That's why they gathered at her home to celebrate. Through all these years, they have known the privilege of her friendship, and the kindliness of her genial personality. So it was only natural that they should have marked the day with song and laughter, and that in departing, they should have wished her good health and the blessing of happy birthdays galore.

Children First Or When?

The work of the 1931 state legislature is ended; and it comes to its termination with no provision for the normal growth of the public school system and with no hint of pride or progress in matters educational. This means that Alabama's growing school child must wear the same old suit of clothes for eight years instead of four.

Worse than this! It means that we must go along with an outfit trimmed considerable smaller by citizen Taxpayer's cutting down on 1930 tax valuations. His school maintenance must be had for about a million and a quarter less during 1931-2 than during 1930-1. And yet he is bigger! A whale of a lot bigger from every angle each year.

Now, in these days of strain and necessary economy, every thinking citizen has felt a sincere sympathy for our state legislators as they have tried to find tax money for state operations. They met pledged to economy; and they have economized so far as schools are concerned.

The Warrior's disappointment is that the legislature couldn't find the means to make possible the modest program proposed for rural schools. The state university, Auburn, Montevallo, normal colleges, all city school boards, and all the other educational interests stood aside and said, "We ask for nothing for ourselves in this emergency. The keenest point of need is our rural school children. Appropriate for them a small transportation fund, increase their school building and equipment fund, enlarge the equalization fund. Guarantee at least a seven months term."

President Denny of the University appeared in person to plead this cause. The American Legion spoke in no uncertain fashion. The state teachers organization approved heartily. The committee on Education of the lower legislative house reported the rural school program favorably by unanimous vote. The Senate economy program stopped all action through their Committee on Education.

Yet this same Senate group favors a $25,000,000 bond issue for roads and a new gas tax! Times are hard, gentlemen; but our big cars must roll smoothly. Most of us live in the city where tax valuations will educate our children in decent style without new laws. We are not going to send our children to county schools! We must have roads! Let's do our economizing without discomfort to ourselves. Hard times! But we must ride over good roads through the country. We do not send to county schools! If we had to, we would take them up some way—bond issues, new taxes, or what not!

Governor Miller said that education should be his first interest. So did the Democratic platform! Who's first now, gentlemen? Roads, schools, economy, or what?

Alabama's rural school terms are now as short as any in christendom; and when the full effect of legislative inaction and of necessary tax reduction on rural lands is felt in further shortening of terms and deprivation of school advantages, then there will be a public most dissatisfied with Alabama conditions. The sad part is that meanwhile thousands of rural boys and girls with fine possibilities for development will have missed their way educationally.

J. H. Williams, a progressive farmer residing on Thorsby Route One was in Clanton on business last Saturday. While in town he called at the News office.

GRAPES ARE READY SAYS J. H. JACKSON

Last Monday the News office received a pleasant visit from J. H. Jackson, a well known citizen of the county and who is widely known for the fine grapes he raises on his farm for the market, and he brought a large basket of the delicious grapes to the News office as a gift.

The grapes Mr. Jackson raises are the Concord and he states are extra fine for making jellies, but judging from the taste of those left at the News office, they are extra fine for just plain eating like they are, as well. For several years Mr. Jackson has been raising and selling his grapes and at present has many customers. He resides on Clanton Route 1, about one-half mile east of Lomax, and his home is easy to reach.

In talking with Mr. Jackson it was learned that Mrs. Lee Traywick is his daughter. It will be remembered that Lee Traywick died from injuries received during an election here sometime ago, leaving his widow and six children who are dependent on Mr. Jackson and have been since the death of Mr. Traywick. By purchasing these fine Concord grapes from Mr. Jackson, one will not only be getting value received for their money, but will be aiding in a large way toward helping him support his six grandchildren, who so unfortunately lost their father.

Mr. Jackson will be found to be a man of high standards and one of the county's stalwart citizens.

CHAPTER XXXII

Secretary of War Baker went to London to discuss with the British authorities the prospects for additional shipping and also the general subject of munitions. While there he sent me the following telegram March 25, 1918, embodying suggestions from the prime minister which showed the deep anxiety of the British:

"I have just had a long talk with the prime minister. He urges three proposals for your consideration, first, that our divisions in France be placed immediately in line to relieve French divisions for service elsewhere, quiet sectors being chosen for troops with least training.

"Second, that all available engineer troops be taken from lines of communication work and sent to aid of British engineers preparing positions back of present lines. It is urged that suspension of our work would be but temporary and that the work suggested is imperative.

"Third, that infantry be sent first of the entire six divisions to be transported by British in view of present acute needs of that army. No answer to the foregoing is necessary until I see you tomorrow when we can discuss the suggestions fully."

First Division Ordered Into Line.

My diary notes the following:

Chaumont, Friday, March 29, 1918.—Held conference with the secretary of war and General Bliss yesterday on joint recommendation of military representatives of the war council.

At Petain's request, the First division ordered to battle line, which Mr. Baker said people at home would enthusiastically approve.

Mr. Paul Cravath dined with us this evening and speaking of unity, favored placing control in the hands of a committee composed of Marshal Haig, General Petain and myself.

Council Asks Change in Plans.

The situation had become so serious that the military representatives seemed to think it necessary to recommend that all previous plans for the shipment of American troops be disregarded and that nothing but infantry and machine gun units be shipped until otherwise directed by the supreme war council. This they did in the form of a joint (or unanimous) note, which was, of course, approved by the supreme war council.

I was very much surprised at the attitude of General Bliss, our military representative with the council, as without his consent the joint note could not have been submitted to the council.

When the joint note was presented to Secretary Baker I pointed out to him and General Bliss that the proposal, if approved by the President, would place the disposition of American units entirely in the hands of the supreme war council and take them quite out of our control, even for training, and would without doubt destroy all possibility of our forming an American army.

The secretary was as strongly opposed to any such outcome as I, and after some discussion he dictated his views in a cable to President Wilson explicitly recommending that the control of our forces should be retained by our commander in chief and that the note be approved only in that sense.

Reply From Wilson.

The message forwarding the joint note with Mr. Baker's comment was answered by a cable from Washington dated March 30, which stated:

"The President concurs in the joint note of the permanent military representatives of the supreme war council in the sense formulated in your No. 67 March 28, and wishes you to regard yourself authorized to decide questions of immediate co-operation or replacement."

It was thought that this statement, coming from the President, would check, at least for the time being, the demands of the allies that we provide units for building up their divisions, but their insistence continued.

The President's message was followed March 30 by a cable from the department, which stated:

"The recommendations of secretary of war to President . . . that preferential transportation be given to American infantry and machine-gun units in present emergency understood and will be followed."

It went on to say that these units pertaining to three divisions, the Third, Fifth and Seventy-seventh, would be sent at once, and those of three other divisions about May 1.

Replying April 3 to the department's cable, I emphasized that it was "not intended that our units should replace the losses of British or French organizations, and therefore our artillery should be held in readiness to follow when called for," although it was possible that the situation might become "so serious that some of our infantry units will be forced to serve with British temporarily."

My intentions were further indicated by saying: "Americans must not lose sight of the purpose to build up divisions and corps of their own," and also, "we must avoid the tendency to incorporate our infantry into British divisions where it will be used up and never relieved."

My cable recommended that the infantry of two divisions be sent by British shipping and two by our own, but that present plans should go no further than this. It was my purpose not to become too deeply involved in an agreement that would make it impossible later to form our own independent force under our own officers.

CHAPTER XXXIII

Secretary Baker and I had frequently discussed the question of a supreme allied commander, and we were both ready to accept it in principle when proposed.

In response to a notice from Premier Clemenceau I went, April 3, to Beauvais to meet with the supreme war council. Arriving early, Colonel Boyd and I had to wait an hour at the hotel de ville before M. Clemenceau and Lloyd George came into the conference room. Marshal Haig, General Foch, Petain, Sir Henry Wilson, Bliss, Weygand and myself were the others participating.

Brigadier General Spiers acted as interpreter, and Lieut. Col. Sir Maurice Hankey, who usually accompanied Mr. Lloyd George, as recorder. The meeting was finally called to order by M. Clemenceau, who stated its purpose, saying in substance:

"We have come together to settle a very simple question regarding the functions of General Foch. I think we are all in agreement as to the co-ordination of allied action, but there is some difference in the understanding of General Foch's powers as conferred upon him at the Doullens conference of March 26. General Foch will explain his difficulties."

Foch Calls for Action.

General Foch then set forth briefly his situation, as follows:

"The powers conferred by the Doullens conference were limited to the co-ordination of action between the allies. They were conferred while the action was on. The power to co-ordinate has been construed to be limited to the time the allies were in action. That was March 26 at Doullens. Now we are at April 3.

"Now that the two opposing armies are no longer in action but have stopped and are facing each other, there is nothing to co-ordinate. There should be authority to prepare for action and direct it. So we are right back where we were, and nothing can be done until an action starts again."

Lloyd George Pleads for Unity.

Mr. Lloyd George then entered the discussion, saying substantially:

"We have had more than three years of this war and we have not had unity of action during that time. During the last year we have had two kinds of strategy, one by Haig and another by Petain, both different, and nothing has been gained. The only thing that was accomplished was by General Nivelle, when he was in supreme command.

"General Foch is now empowered to co-ordinate the action of the allied armies, but this does not go far enough, as he has no authority to control except by conferring with the respective commanders in chief. He wants authority to prepare for action. I think the resolution made at Doullens should be modified so that we may have a better understanding. I should like to hear what General Bliss and General Pershing have to say."

Pershing Gives His Views.

I then gave my view, which was set forth in a brief memorandum prepared in pencil after the discussion began, as follows:

"The principle of unity of command is undoubtedly the correct one for the allies to follow. I do not believe it is possible to have unity of action without a supreme commander. We have already had experience enough in trying to co-ordinate the operations of the allied armies without success. There has never been real unity of action.

"Such co-ordination between two or three armies is impossible no matter who the commander in chief may be. Each commander in chief is interested in his own army and cannot get the other commander's point of view nor grasp the problem as a whole. I am in favor of a supreme commander and believe that the success of the allied cause depends upon it.

"I think the necessary action should be taken by this council at once. I am in favor of conferring the supreme command upon General Foch."

When I had finished Mr. Lloyd George came over to where I sat, took me by the hand and said:

"I agree fully with General Pershing. This is well put."

After some further informal discussion, a draft of the resolution was submitted which omitted reference to the American army. Whereupon I called attention to the oversight, saying:

"I think this resolution should include the American army. The arrangement is to be in force, as I understand it, from now on, and the American army will soon be ready to function as such and should be included as an entity like the British and French armies."

"There is no American army yet as such," General Petain interjected, "as its units are either in training or are amalgamated with the British and French."

Pershing Has U. S. Included.

"There may not be an American army in force functioning now," I replied, "but there soon will be, and I want this resolution to apply to it when it becomes a fact. The American government is represented here at this conference and in the war, and any action as to the supreme command that includes the British and French armies should also include the American army."

The foregoing account of the conference may not be an exact record of the language used, but it is given as my aid took it down.

The following resolution was then read and adopted:

"General Foch is charged by the British, French and American governments with the co-ordination of the action of the allied armies on the western front; to this end there is conferred on him all the power necessary for its effective realization. To the same end the British, French and American governments confide in General Foch the strategic direction of military operations.

"The commanders in chief of the British, French and American armies will exercise to the fullest extent the tactical direction of their armies. Each commander in chief will have the right to appeal to his government if in his opinion his army is placed in danger by the instructions received from General Foch."

Allied Commander in Chief.

The idea of an allied commander in chief had been suggested and discussed many times unofficially, but for various reasons, political and otherwise, it had never been definitely adopted by the supreme war council. With the distrust that existed among the allies, it was not easy to bring about the decision in favor of a supreme commander, and it was made possible only by the extreme emergency of the situation.

The designation of General Foch as commander in chief of the allied armies in France was proposed by the

Too Much ACID

MANY people, two hours after eating, suffer indigestion as they call it. It is usually excess acid. Correct it with an alkali. The best way, the quick, harmless and efficient way, is Phillips Milk of Magnesia. It has remained for 50 years the standard with physicians. One spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in stomach acids, and at once. The symptoms disappear in five minutes.

You will never use crude methods when you know this better method. And you will never suffer from excess acid when you prove out this easy relief.

Get genuine Phillips Milk of Magnesia, the kind that physicians have prescribed for over 50 years in correcting excess acids. 25c and 50c a bottle—any drugstore.

"Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips Chemical Company and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

FAMILY OF THREE DIE IN ONE DAY NEAR DOZIER

Andalusia, Ala., July 22—Death yesterday chose three different weapons to destroy a family of three near Dozier, one by one.

Working in a field near his home, Frank Mitchell, a farmer, collapsed with a stroke of paralysis and died before aid could reach him.

A short time later and during a thunderstorm, his son, Love Mitchell, stood under the eave of the house, washing his hands. He was struck and killed by lightning.

Advised of the double tragedy and hurrying home, the widow and mother, Mrs. Frank Mitchell, collapsed. As a physician worked over her, she died of a strange ailment that has not been diagnosed.

WOMEN: watch your BOWELS

What should women do to keep their bowels moving freely? A doctor should know the answer. That is why pure Syrup Pepsin is so good for women. It just suits their delicate organism. It is the prescription of an old family doctor who has treated thousands of women patients, and who made a special study of bowel troubles.

It is fine for children, too. They love its taste. Let them have it every time their tongues are coated or their skin is sallow. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made from fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients.

When you've a sick headache, can't eat, are bilious or sluggish; and at the times when you are most apt to be constipated, take a little of this famous prescription (all drug stores keep it ready in big bottles), and you'll know why Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the favorite laxative of over a million women!

AN ELOPEMENT AT 14

Most parents would be shocked if a daughter eloped and got married at the age of 14, and in most cases their apprehensions would be justified. But one never can tell, as a recent news story illustrates.

A Tennessee girl named Mary Adeline fell in love with A. V. Deadrick, but her parents forbade her to marry because she was only 14. She ran away from home and married her lover, who was 21, and later received her parents' forgiveness and blessing. That was a long time ago.

But Mr. and Mrs. Deadrick are still living and have celebrated their 82nd wedding anniversary, surrounded by six children and more than fifty grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Both are still active, he at 93 and she at 87, and conduct a summer resort near Knoxville.

Briefly stated, their recipe for a happy married life is: Be considerate of each other; face troubles with a smile; work to the same end in life; each do his or her part in the best way possible; practice self-denial.

An excellent formula, no doubt, but regardless of its success in the case mentioned, we would advise young people not to be too impatient to put it into practice.

SNATCHED FROM DEATH

Barring miracles, the rescue of William Dugan of Philadelphia from the embrace of death after being "drowned" and unconscious for nine hours marks the world's record for literally raising the dead.

As recorded by the press, Dugan passed through all the stages of physical death from drowning, and "when taken from the water his body was blue and chilled, his heart had ceased beating, his pulse was still and there was no sign of life."

Heroic efforts by doctors, however, finally revived him after nine long hours of seemingly useless labor. When consciousness returned Dugan quickly revived and described the sensations experienced as "a peaceful, dreamless sleep; a placid oblivion, devoid of disturbances."

This incident arouses many pertinent speculations. To all intents and purposes, Dugan was physically dead for several hours. Without the persistent efforts of his rescuers he would have remained dead. If his only sensations were those of a "peaceful, dreamless sleep," would there have ever been an awakening to the pains or pleasures of a future state? Or is oblivion, after all, the end of those who pass on? Does what is called the soul, or spirit, pass immediately at death to its reward or punishment, or does it hold itself in a state of suspended animation awaiting the time when all human efforts for a revival of life are definitely exhausted? Or is the idea of a future state only a delusion?

Every person may supply the answers according to his own beliefs. But who really knows the correct answer?

Household Hints

Turn the electric fan on garments which must be dried quickly.

Blotting paper is a valuable aid for quickly removing spilled water, ink, and fruit juices.

If candle wax drips on the table cloth scrape off as much as possible and remove any remaining wax by pressing the cloth between white blotters with a hot iron.

The tiny cracks often in the surface of furniture are caused by a lack of oil. A good furniture polish applied once a week will prevent such a condition.

Punchboard Ban Signed By Miller

Montgomery, Ala., July 26.—The bill outlawing slot-machines and punchboards in Alabama, is now a law. This measure of which Representative Davis of Macon is the author and which appears in the official records as House Bill No. 423, was formally approved and signed by Gov. Miller yesterday afternoon. It was passed by the Senate during the forenoon.

Not only operation, but possession of punchboards, slot-machines and like devices, is prohibited by the new law, which provides as punishment for violation, a fine of not more than $500, and at the discretion of the court, an additional penalty of not more than six months at hard labor or imprisonment in the county jail.

Rigid provision is made covering the forfeiture and destruction of the prohibited devices following seizure by officers of the law. The officer making the seizure will receive half of the contents of each machine forfeited, and the other half to go to the general fund of the county where the forfeiture occurs.

The law is to be effective on and after October 1, 1931.

CHILTON W. M. U. QUARTERLY MEET HELD ON JULY 23RD

The quarterly meeting of the Chilton County W. M. U. was held with Bethsalem church on July 23, 1931. Supt., Mrs. Donald Merchant was in charge. A beautiful day, good program and a large crowd, with a splendid message on "Cooperation," by Rev. Stucky, at the morning address. While the work moves on slowly, we are made to feel that God is with us and helping us reclaim the old, and enlisting new ones into His work which He left for us to do. We were glad indeed to have Rev. Faulkner and wife and Mrs. Martin of Birmingham with us. Friends, when we try to do our work that He left for us to do, and hear such messages as Rev. Stucky's and others, we feel lifted up on higher planes, and with more courage to go forward in His work.

Mrs. W. H. RAYBON,
Secretary.

When Patro Ruiz of Jarez, Mexico, awoke one morning recently, he discovered that the door and the two windows which he had forgotten to lock before he retired, had been stolen from his home.

Adams - Martin Wedding Solemnized

The many friends of Miss Ruth Martin of Thorsby will be interested in her marriage to Mr. Herbert E. Adams which was solemnized Sunday evening, July 26, at the Thorsby Baptist church, Rev. J. W. Jones, pastor of the church, officiating.

The altar of the church was banked with a profusion of ferns, interspersed with pink crepe myrtle and gladioli with pink tulle streamers marking the reserved seats for relatives.

Preceding the ceremony Miss Lois Thompson sang, "At Dawning" and Miss Agnes Leary sang, "O Promise Me." They were accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Marvin Davenport.

To the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding march, the bride entered with her uncle, W. J. Billingsley, of Clanton, by whom she was given in marriage, the groom entering with Marion S. Smith of Clanton as best man.

The bride was lovely in a chic ensemble of blue flat crepe with eggshell accessories in harmony. Her bouquet was of sweetheart roses.

Mrs. Adams is the daughter of Mrs. Leila Martin of Thorsby and has been a teacher in the Thorsby Junior High school for a period of five years. The groom is the son of P. M. Adams of Collinsville, Ala., and holds a responsible position with the Gulf States Steel Plant of Gadsden.

Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for Gadsden where they will make their future home.

Mrs. L. E. Diefenderfer and children, Helen and Milton, returned Friday from a visit with relatives and friends in Ohio and Pennsylvania. They have been away for several days, and made the trip in their car without any trouble of any kind. Their many friends in Clanton are glad to see them back again.

48 BILLS DIE AS MILLER'S OFFICE CLOSES FOR DAY

One Signed Late; Plumbing Examiner Board Created By Last Minute App.

Gov. Miller sounded the death knell for 48 measures enacted by the last Legislature when he closed his office Tuesday afternoon without affixing his signature to them and included among them were a number of important measures such as the game and fish conservation bills, the Birmingham and Christopher bill which would have guaranteed to each county in the state $5,000 a year out of the educational equalization fund.

While Gov. Miller killed by pocket vetoes eight or ten important measures, the great majority of measures dying without his signature were made up of private relief bills.

Tuesday was the last day the Governor had to affix his signature to bills remaining on his desk after the adjournment of the Legislature. Under the Constitution, he had until midnight to sign measures but he closed the books at 5 o'clock and called it a day, thus ringing down the curtain on the last legislative session insofar as measures becoming laws are concerned.

Oyster Measure Dies

A statewide measure creating a board to regulate the practice of engineering in Alabama and creating a State board to carry out the provisions of the act died when the Governor failed to affix his signature. The oyster commission bill by Senator Craft of Mobile died without a signature. This measure would have set up an oyster commission, the members to be named by the State Conservation Commissioner.

The vetoed bills included 26 Senate measures and 22 from the House, the majority of them minor relief bills.

Others Vetoed

Other bills pocket vetoed were:

By Craft: Authorizing Mobile County to levy a license on all motor vehicles.

By Hooton: Reducing the minimum time before suit for divorce on the grounds of abandonment may be filed.

By Morrow: Regulating the inferior courts of Jefferson County.

By Bradford: Exempting from license and taxation all lands used for State fairs and agricultural exhibits in Jefferson County.

Bills Signed Earlier

Sixteen bills became law Tuesday as the vanguard of the last day's work reached the Secretary of State's office.

They were:

By Snodgrass — Authorizing candidates to speak over radio between the first and second primaries.

By Tidwell — Authorizing banks to raise or lower their capital stock without a 30-day notice upon consent of all its stockholders.

By McGowin—Authorizing judges of probate to issue notice of sale of prop-

DISORDERLY CONDUCT CHARGE AGAINST EFFIE DUKE, NEGRO

A charge of disorderly conduct was placed against Effie Duke, negro, and he was ordered to appear before Justice of the Peace, T. W. Bryan, according to information this week. Duke was fined ten dollars and costs.

The information stated that this charge grew out of the alleged conduct of Duke on the night of May 10th, in front of the Methodist church in Clanton in the presence of persons at the church. It was also stated that a city officer was called and that Duke, in a drunken condition was led away by the officer and turned over to another negro with instructions to carry him home, and no case was made despite the original complaint made to the officer concerning the conduct of the negro in the presence of the white people near the church on the night of May 10th.

LARGE STILL IS CAPTURED IN OPERATION

4 Men at Still When Sheriff And Deputies Arrive On Scene Of Work

One of the largest distilling outfits captured in this county in sometime fell prey to the work of Sheriff W. H. Gillespie and his deputies last Thursday morning, when they staged a regular raid up near the Shelby County line, southwest of South Calera, and captured a still said to be of about a 200-gallon capacity.

The still was found in full operation when the officers arrived on the scene, and three white men were brought in and lodged in the jail at Montgomery, according to the information from the sheriff's office. It was stated that there were four men seen at the still, but before the officers could make the raid one of the men escaped, but after being sought, is now also listed among the arrests.

Officers stated that no trouble was encountered in making the arrests of the operators of the still. There were about five gallons of whiskey already run from the still, which was full of mash.

No other arrests of importance were reported by the Sheriff's office up to last Tuesday afternoon.

400 FARMERS WANTED ON AUBURN TRIP

Visit To Experiment Station Being Arranged for Farmers Of This County

Four hundred farmers from Chilton County are wanted to make a trip to Auburn, Ala., on Tuesday, August 18th, according to a statement from C. E. Stapp, County Agent.

Mr. Stapp is arranging for this trip to Auburn for the farmers to visit the Experiment Station, stating that there are three or four experiments now being conducted at Auburn, either of which will be worth the trip to any farmer in this county.

By way of Wetumpka, it is only ninety miles to Auburn on good road, Mr. Stapp pointed out, and that ten or twelve gallons of gasoline and one quart of oil will be about the actual expense of the trip. Mr. Stapp suggests that four men to the automobile would get by on an expense of about one dollar each, and that he doesn't know of any way the farmers of this county could spend a dollar and a days time right now to better advantage. Any who believe it possible to join the group going to Auburn on Tuesday, August 18th, to notify Mr. Stapp at the earliest convenience

IMPORTANT FACTS ON FARMING WERE TAUGHT

Many important facts about farming in Alabama were taught and demonstrated at the annual gathering of farm people in Auburn, July 27-31. Among them were:

1. That farmers of the state need to give more attention to their soils, and make and keep them rich with winter legumes, summer legumes, livestock, and better farming in general.

2. That livestock and other crops should be produced in conjunction with cotton ofr safer farming, lower costs, and better returns.

3. That adequate machinery is needed on each farm for efficiency of labor and low-cost production.

4. That cooperation among farm people is conducive to better business in buying and selling and also to better social life, as well as many other advantages.

More than one thousand people were in Auburn during the week. As part of the program the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation and the Alabama Council of Home Demonstration Clubs held their annual meetings in Auburn, each lasting two days.

Practically every county in the state was represented. Men and women were present in about equal numbers. The county farm agents and the county home agents were present also.

Prof. L. N. Duncan, director of the extension service of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, was general chairman of the program of the week.

GRADE FARM PRODUCTS

No farmer would expect to sell at a good price a barrel filled with onions, cucumbers, turnips and potatoes all mixed together. It is almost as foolish to expect to get the best market price for a barrel of a single product in which all sorts are dumped without regard to size, color or cleanliness.

By neglecting to properly grade their produce, many farmers must sell it for much less than might be obtained for the same stuff by exercising a little care in preparing it for the market. In discussing this important phase of marketing an expert says:

"Quality and uniformity in grains, fruit, cotton, potatoes, dairy and poultry products command a premium from the buyer. A crate of large, clean eggs of uniform color will bring more in a central market than one in which small, dirty, many colored eggs are included. Dirty potatoes of mixed sizes sell poorly alongside of clean ones that have been graded."

The difference in price between graded and ungraded products often means the difference between profit and loss in farming operations.

THE PEDDLER NUISANCE

House to house peddlers and solicitors of orders for this and that are becoming an even greater nuisance to the American home as any housewife might truthfully testify. Still, the housewife whose home is constantly invaded by these itinerant super-salesmen has the remedy in her own hands.

A timely suggestion along this line is made by Prof. Conrad of the New Jersey Teachers College, who points out that the peddler who boasts that his firm has no store is trying to make a store out of your home. You are expected to furnish a place where he may do business free from the expense which other merchants must pay.

Besides, he insists on making you shop at his convenience, no matter how much it may interfere with your daily routine. He takes up your time arguing you into buying something that in most cases you neither want nor need. Sometimes you buy to get rid of him, when you ought to say:

"This is a home, not a place of business, and I am not going to allow you to use it as a store. Good day."

That might seem rather inconsiderate. But it is one way of discouraging the peddler, who has not the slightest consideration for your peace and comfort, but uses your home as a market place, in unfair competition with home merchants who pay rent, taxes, license fees, and in other ways contribute to the welfare of the community.

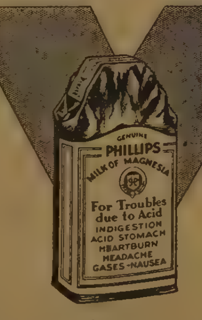
ACID STOMACH



EXCESS acid is the common cause of indigestion. It results in pain and sourness about two hours after eating. The quick corrective is an alkali which will neutralize acid. The best corrective is Phillips Milk of Magnesia. It has remained standard with physicians in the 50 years since its invention.

One spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes instantly many times its volume in acid. It is harmless and tasteless and its action is quick. You will never rely on crude methods once you learn how quickly this method acts. Please let it show you—now.

Be sure to get the genuine. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips Chemical Company and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

News In Brief Form

The United States imports tin to the value of $60,000,000 to over $100,000,000 annually but produces very little, according to the United States Bureau of Mines, Department of Commerce.

Late in July leading German banks united for mutual guaranty of their liabilities by forming the Acceptance and Guaranty Bank with a capital of $48,000,000.

At a meeting of the tenth annual convention, July 30-31, the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation endorsed the plan of income taxation in preference to the "antiquated system of advalorem taxation" and asked the voters of the state to approve at the polls the constitutional amendment proposed by the recent session of the legislature embodying these principles.

"Based upon performance for the first half of the year, passenger car and truck sales for 1931 will total 2,422,000 units. That will be more than 500,000 sales short of the low mark established in 1927, and considerably lower than first estimates for this year, but it presages a comeback in 1932 that will be far more rapid than the industry has enjoyed in the past," said the press of July 26.

An increase in the consumption of butter, particularly in European countries, following the low general level of prices is reported by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, U. S. Department of Agriculture, in its July summary of world dairy prospects. This increase is noted particularly in Great Britain where the consumption of imported butter for the present year from January to June 15, was about 19 per cent more than for the corresponding period of 1930.

NEW SCIENCE TRIUMPH

Thousands of years ago mankind learned to use fire in cooking his food, but not until recently did he learn another of nature's open secrets—how to render foods imperishable by employing the same refrigeration principle that nature uses in polar regions.

Although Arctic explorers have often testified to the efficacy of 50 and 60-below zero cold in keeping their musk-ox meat and fish deliciously edible for months in a frozen state, it remained for an American scientist, Clarence Birdseye, to find the way to duplicate polar refrigeration in warmer climes.

Years of hard work and experimentation have resulted in Birdseye's perfecting a quick-freezing process by which meats, seafoods, poultry, vegetables and fruits are frozen at 50 below zero in a manner that does not permit them to lose any of their fresh flavor or appearance, even though they are kept hard-frozen for months.

It is fitting, in this age of mechanical wonders, that science has made a contribution to the food field comparable in significance with the motor car, the radio, the airplane, the motion picture and the other new and important additions to life's enjoyment.

A KILLER'S RELIGION

It is well known that the most hardened criminals have decidedly religious tendencies. Many stories are told of bandits praying for success before starting out on a robbing expedition, and the like.

A story is told of "Two-Gun" Crowley, a New York youth of 19, who was recently shot five times by policemen before he was arrested for killing one of their number. In the hospital he was unrepentant and defiant. He said: "Of course I killed that cop. I don't like cops. No, I don't want a lawyer; get it over with. Repent? Hell no! My conscience was never so clear in my life. What I want is a square meal."

When the district attorney asked if he would have a nice beefsteak, Crowley indignantly replied: "No, sir. No meat for me. Don't you know this is Friday?"

So, out of respect for Crowley's religious scruples he was served fish.

Hints for Homemakers

WHEN jars in which vegetables have been preserved acquire a cloudy appearance, you can quickly restore their original lustre by washing them in water to which a dash of ammonia has been added.

When well sweetened, home made, chilled beverages quickly relieve that mid-afternoon weariness which overtakes many of us in hot weather. The sugar used for sweetening is recognized by science as a source of quick energy to help relieve fatigue, while the natural fruit juices supply essential vitamins.

Drivers of sixes never want less because it takes six cylinders to give the smooth, silent power that makes driving really enjoyable

CHEVROLET Drivers of sixes are spoiled for anything less. Drivers of sixes are sold on multiple cylinders. They would no more think of giving up "six" performance than any other real advancement of motoring. For them, the whole cylinder question has been settled.

Slip behind the wheel of a Chevrolet Six, and you'll know why these drivers feel as they do. Step on the starter, let the motor idle—and notice its silence. Throw in the clutch, shift into "low"—and feel that smoothness. Change into "second," hit a faster and faster clip, slip into "high," sweep along at top speed—then throttle down to barely a crawl. The smoothness and flexibility you always get are six-cylinder smoothness, six-cylinder flexibility. Annoying vibration is gone!

Over two million owners have tested and proved this six-cylinder Chevrolet engine. They have found that it costs less for gas and oil than any other. They have found that it actually reduces upkeep costs, by holding vibration to a minimum. They know a six is better in every way—and they would never be satisfied with less!

My Experiences in the WORLD WAR

Allied Commander in Chief.

The idea of an allied commander in chief had been suggested and discussed many times unofficially, but for various reasons, political and otherwise, it had never been definitely adopted by the supreme war council. With the distrust that existed among the allies, it was not easy to bring about the decision in favor of a supreme commander, and it was made possible only by the extreme emergency of the situation.

The designation of General Foch as commander in chief of the allied armies in France was proposed by the French. April 15 I received a letter from M. Clemenceau advising me that Mr. Lloyd George had approved the suggestion, and asked if I agreed. I replied in a personal note expressing my agreement subject to the confirmation of President Wilson, which came April 17.

Once the question of supreme command was settled the co-ordinated energies of the allied armies could be directed with maximum effect toward a common end. While dark days were still ahead, we were spared the chagrin of inefficiency through lack of teamwork.

CHAPTER XXXIV

Now that the supreme effort must be made on our part and when units were sorely needed for immediate active service it was found, much to my surprise, that, although the divisions then coming to France had been under training for six months or even more, they still contained a large percentage of untrained men.

As already pointed out, the general staff, when called upon to provide men for special services, had relied upon taking them from combat divisions instead of anticipating such requirements and segregating these specialists from the start and training them as such.

This was a most vicious application in time of war of a very objectionable practice that had grown up in our army in time of peace. It appears that during the preparation of our armies in the World war no other plan was followed and the practice was carried to such an extent that divisions with, say, 25,000 men, which should have been held intact and each one perfected as an organized team, were constantly called upon to send large groups of their trained soldiers to other duties.

Inspects Available Divisions.

In view of their possible early employment I wanted especially to look into the general state of efficiency of our available divisions and give some personal instructions about training. Going the rounds, I met General Hirschauer, who was one of the able French generals, and found him very enthusiastic about the Second, which had been in line at Sommedieu under his command, confirming my own opinion formed from observation and reports. He said that without doubt it was then as efficient as any of his French divisions. The First was further advanced than any of the others and its morale was high at the prospect of going into the battle line.

Recent developments had brought the question of the employment of American troops into immediate consideration. The President's qualified approval of the recommendation of the supreme war council, as embodied in joint note No. 18, was seized upon by the allies and construed as a concession for the unlimited absorption of our troops in their armies.

No doubt my offer to General Foch lent encouragement to the allied view.

On the day of Secretary Baker's departure General Whigham and General Hutchinson came over from the British war office to discuss arrangements for transportation of American troops in accordance with the provisions of joint note No. 18. The conversation indicated that the British understood we were to send 60,000 men per month to train with them and that they were bringing over the same number, making a total of 120,000 per month, beginning with April. They held that the approval of note No. 18 had superseded agreements previously made, including the six-division plan.

Baker Speaks Plainly.

The British conferees entirely ignored the specific condition that the final arrangements as to training and disposition of all our units were to be left in my hands. Their error was pointed out and Mr. Baker then said:

"What is pertinent to the present discussion is that American troops are going to the British for training. I don't want the British public or army or the French public or army to get an exaggerated idea that this scheme provides or will provide a means by which their losses will be made up in the future.

"I want no feeling of disillusionment when General Pershing calls for the troops intrusted to them for training."

Mr. Baker's visit to our armies during this critical period was fortuitous, as the problems that confronted us could then be seen in their true perspective. He had an opportunity to meet the allied leaders, both civil and military, and get in touch with conditions in the different countries.

Of still greater importance, he saw with his own eyes the building of our organization. He was a keen observer, with clear understanding and a logical mind, and obtained in a short time an accurate conception of our task and its difficulties.

As to our relations, he gave me from the start that strong and sympathetic support which means so much to a military commander in the field.

Feared British Were Lagging.

Before Mr. Baker sailed for home I had sent him the letter quoted below, and, although we later discussed its contents briefly, it is given as showing the reaction of at least part of the British press at the time:

"April 5, 1918.—Dear Mr. Secretary: I noticed the other day that one of the British papers, in referring to the fact that plans had been made to send American troops to the assistance of the allies, stated that this would relieve the British of the necessity of depleting the strength of the forces kept at home for defensive purposes.

"This suggests to my mind a certain political phase of the British situation which may give us additional explanation as to why Mr. Lloyd George and British representatives are so urgent in their appeals for assistance from America.

"Following this further, may I suggest that you give the matter serious thought? There is so very much at stake for us that it seems to me very frank representations should be made to the British government as to the urgency of their putting into the army every possible man that can be mustered to meet the immediate emergency. . . .

"It may be that you would think it advisable to go to London, or else to intimate to the President by cable the urgency of Great Britain's putting into the ranks every possible man to withstand the present German onslaught, even if they have to promise to withdraw them in six months, and of their doing so without waiting on us or counting on us in the slightest degree. There will be few enough men even with the best we all can do. It will be time enough for Great Britain to consider the defense of England after she has put forth every possible energy on the continent. Here is the place to beat Germany, and not on British soil. In writing this I have in mind what you told me regarding available men in England."

CHAPTER XXXV

On April 12, 1918, Washington reported a 140,000 increase in cargo tonnage by the use of Dutch ships. Infantry and machine-gun personnel of four divisions were promised for that month.

The allies were at last thoroughly alive to the necessity of an extraordinary effort to provide tonnage for transporting our troops. After months of delay and dissension they realized fully that the superiority of forces vitally necessary to avert defeat must come from across the Atlantic.

America had become their sole reliance, not only for the forces necessary to save them from defeat but for unlimited financial aid as well.

Mr. Baker's first-hand knowledge of the situation in France enabled him to give a fresh impetus to the efforts of the War department. With Gen. Peyton C. March as chief of staff, the general staff and the supply departments began to exert more energy. The war industries board, reorganized under the leadership of B. M. Baruch, had taken definite control and direction of the nation's industries with the sole aim of aiding us to win the war. In the face of the crisis, activity at home had at last replaced the apparent deliberation of our first year in the war. Our hope for an improvement in methods and a more competent co-ordination of effort seemed about to be realized.

First Division Moves Up.

At Petain's request the First division was withdrawn from the line near Toul and sent to Chaumont-en-Vexin, northwest of Paris, to go into an active sector. I visited the division April 16 to witness the division's final maneuver in open warfare before taking its place on the front. Both officers and men were in splendid condition, notwithstanding their long rail journey, and all were ready for the test of actual battle.

General Micheler, who commanded the French Fifth army, to which the First had been assigned, came along to witness the maneuver, and spoke highly of the troops and their efficiency. The weather was clear, but still rather sharp. The countryside was radiant with its green meadows and early flowers, and one could not help thinking how different would be those other fields on which this unit would soon be engaged.

Lack of Regular Officers.

It is a comparatively simple matter to absorb partly trained recruits in veteran organizations, but it is an enormous and difficult task to create organizations entirely of new material. There was a serious lack of regular officers in our organization in both staff and line. The I corps had only 7 per cent of officers from the regular army. Less than 1 per cent of all captains of the line in the A. E. F. at that time had been in the service a year, and the thought of possible immediate activity with such inexperienced leaders was not reassuring.

It was a source of real regret to me not to command the First division in person, and this, coupled with the fact that its entry into the battle was of considerable moment, led me to speak a word of confidence and encouragement. When the officers, about 900 in all, were assembled in the grounds of the chateau occupied as division headquarters they formed a rare group.

These splendid-looking men, hardened by the strenuous work of the fall and by two months in winter trenches, fairly radiated the spirit of courage and gave promise that America's effort would prove her sons the equals of their forefathers.

The First division saw its first major offensive some six weeks later, a brilliant counterattack at Cantigny, in the Amiens sector.

Wanted the A. E. F. United.

That afternoon I motored to Sarcus to see General Foch and sound him out regarding the prospects of uniting our divisions in a sector of our own. I told him that the secretary of war when in France had expressed an earnest desire to hasten the formation of an American army and that this was also the wish of the President.

It was my opinion, I said, that early action would be of great importance in stimulating the morale of our troops and of our people. Now that the First division was to go into line the people at home would expect soon to hear that an American army was engaged on its own front. I suggested the possibility that the corps might be assembled near the First division as a beginning.

General Foch agreed in principle to the suggestion, but was uncertain when the other divisions could be spared, which I, of course, fully appreciated. He pointed out that the enemy was very aggressive and referred to the severe attack against the British on the Lys between Lens and Ypres, which began on the 9th and was still in progress. But looking beyond, I insisted that the Twenty-sixth and Forty-second divisions might be withdrawn at any time from quiet sectors, to be followed by the Second and the Thirty-second and also the Third a few days later.

I pointed out that this force of six divisions, including the First, would equal twelve French divisions, and gave it as my opinion that it would be better to use this American group for active operations than to detain the units in quiet sectors and send French divisions to the battle front.

My understanding after this discussion was very definite that the plan would soon be carried out, leaving the exact time and place to be determined. It was immaterial to me just where it should occur, the point being to get it done.

Hard Fighting on the Lys.

The German offensive on the Lys was another formidable effort to break the British line. The attack was made to the north and south of Armentieres on a front of 24 miles by 27 German divisions. The exhausted British, though they fought with most commendable courage and skill, were forced again to yield with heavy losses to themselves and the Portuguese, consisting of two divisions, who were with them.

Several French divisions were hurried to the Lys front, but it was a week after the attack began before they were put into the line. They then relieved British divisions at the famous Kemmel hill, only to be surprised and defeated themselves April 25, much to their chagrin. The battle was practically ended by the last of the month, with a gain by the Germans of ten or eleven miles and the capture of important territory from the British, but with failure to take Hazebrouck.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF A SOLDIER OF THE CROSS, THE REV. W. J. RUDDICK

A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our community
Which never can be filled
God in His wisdom, has recalled
The boon His love had given
And though the body slumbers here
The soul is safe in Heaven.

Dear Bro. Ruddick, thou hast left us,
And our loss we deeply feel
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal
Yet again, we hope to meet thee
When the day of life is fled
When in Heaven with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed

Weep not that his toils are over,
Weep not that his race is run
God grant we may rest as calmly
When our work like his is done
Till then we yield with gladness,
Our brother to Him to keep
And rejoice in the sweet assurance
He giveth His loved one sleep

Precious brother, you have left us,
Left us forever more,
But we hope to meet our loved one
On that bright and happy shore
Lonely the house and sad the home
Since our dear one has gone.
But Oh! A brighter home than ours
In Heaven is now his own.

Farewell Brother, but not forever,
There will be a glorious dawn—
We shall meet to part no, never,
On the Resurrection morn
Though thy darling form lies sleeping
In the cold and silent tomb,
Thou shall have a glorious waking
When the blessed Lord doth come.

Always in Jesus, blessed sleep
From which none ever wake to weep.
A calm and undisturbed repose—
Unbroken by the last of foes—
Asleep in Jesus. Far from thee
Thy kindred and their graves may be;
But thine is still a blessed sleep
From which none ever wake to weep.

Rev. W. J. Ruddick was born in Ireland. He came to America in his youth and has spent the better part of his life in Alabama. About forty-seven years he has lived in Stanton.

And we all grew to love him and to think of him as a shepherd over the flock. He has served twenty-seven churches as their pastor.

The pearly gates were opened Thursday afternoon, about three o'clock and he made his flight to Jesus, to sleep in peace 'till resurrection day, where loved ones will not be scattered.

Bro. Ruddick was a good man, who gave everyone a smile and a word of greeting wherever he roamed.

The angel of death has entered your home again. In this, your darkest hour, allow me to offer my deepest sympathy. Bro. Ruddick was a good man, who scattered deeds of kindness in the pathway of theirs. May your motto be, "Prepare to meet thy God, for we know not when the son of man shall come, or send His angel."

Respect Pedestrian's Rights

Concede and safeguard the rights of pedestrians—all motorists are pedestrians some of the time, points out the Silvertown Safety League.

Pedestrians have the right of way on crosswalks at all times unless controlled by traffic lights and are entitled to full protection at all times. If crossing when the light turns they are entitled to reach a place of safety without hazard from vehicles.

Pedestrians should always use the crosswalk or footpath where one is provided, and should obey traffic lights. They should refrain from crossing streets or roads at unprotected crossings or intersections in the face of rapidly approaching vehicles.

Avoid crossing streets in mid-block if traffic is moving on it.

Avoid stepping suddenly into a street or road without first looking to the left and then to the right.

If walking on a highway, use the left side of the road facing the approach of traffic. If walking at night, carry a light if possible.

If driving cattle or other animals on the roads, keep them well to the left side, facing the approach of traffic.

Motorists may join the Silvertown Safety League at any Goodrich dealer's place of business. There is no charge for joining and members receive attractive radiator emblems for their cars

Don't Eat In Dirty Places

In emphasizing the importance of wholesome food and the prevention of food poisoning, the Public Health Service, says that when eating in hotels, restaurants or other public places one can never be sure that the food is properly cooked and handled in a sanitary manner, but some degree of assurance may be obtained by eating only in those places which to outward apperances are clean and where sanitary cleanliness extends to the toilet facilities provided. If no provision is made for guests to wash the hands it is safe to assume that the kitchen and dining room help are not provided with this necessary adjunct.

A Good Code For Anybody

Mahatma Gandhi, the leader of the revolution against British rule in India, told newspaper men the other day the rules of conduct which have governed his own life. He would not presume to lay down rules for anybody else, he said, but he had a code which he consistently followed. These are the rules of life, as Gandhi observes them!

Love.
Truth.
Chastity.
Fearlessness
Service to others.
Control of appetites.
Belief in the equality of all mankind.
Abstention from alcohol, tobacco and drugs.
Belief that all great religions are of equal worth.
Take nothing that is not paid for by one's own work.
Valuing possessions not for themselves but for their usefulness.

It is not easy to live in a world which professes, in the main, such a code, and to obey it literally. For while these rules of conduct as laid down by Gandhi differ in no important respect from those laid down by Jesus Christ and before Him by Buddha and other great religious teachers, very few human beings have had the hardihood to even attempt to live up to them. Gandhi himself, even his enemies admit, comes about as close to it as any man in modern times.

It seems to us that one of the causes of the trouble in which the world finds itself today is that most people have forgotten these ancient rules of life, which have always been sound and still are. We have been carried away, all of us, both in America and elsewhere, by the idea that there is some magic in material possessions which will make us happy in spite of ourselves. Nothing was ever farther from the truth.

"ROUND TOWN"
---by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

> "It is great, and there is no other greatness—to make one nook of God's creation more fruitful, better, more worthy of God; to make some human heart a little wiser, manlier, happier—more blessed, less accused."

Which brings to mind that poem titled, "But, Where Are The Men To Lead," which goes on to tell of the youngsters who are growing up, looking to their elders for guidance. But, where are the men to lead? We have them and they are apparently leading, judging from the activities of the members of the Kiwanis Club of Clanton, and many other citizens of our town and county.

Another spurt in business here will no doubt fill up the several vacant buildings we have in town. There is something that doesn't look good in a town—vacant buildings. They not only make things look somewhat dead, but their appearance even to the far-sighted and successful business man is not pleasing. I'd make a suggestion that the fellows who own the vacant buildings open up some kind of business and at least make things look that much better in town. And who knows, they might be able to make a little money by just doing that.

A cafe opens and a cafe closes. We are none the worse off. The cafe operated by Mrs. Nelson, on the highway closed and DeWitt Easterling opened a nice new and attractive one just across the street. Mrs. Nelson went to the cafe up near the James Sign Shop, where a lot of remodeling has been going on. In fact, I am of the opinion that by this change which took place the first of the month puts Clanton a little better off so far as cafes are concerned.

I'm glad to see our fire department doing regular practice each week now. Of course, we haven't had any fires recently, but they tell me that practice makes perfect. The fire department got kind of reorganized the other night and now Ruphus Brown is the new captain. Ruphus, like the rest of the fire fighters, really goes into the work with all his energy, and I think the town ought to be proud of our firemen—volunteers at that, yet well organized, with some fine equipment to work with. Just imagine—what would we do if we didn't have that fire truck, or perhaps, I should say, what we would have done?

As I sit here with this typewriter staring me in the face, somewhat accusingly, and I trying to think what to think about when I'm thinking about what I ought to think about,—oh, the dickens—anyway these hot days are tough on fat folks like myself, and the nights are so cool, and there is a little blond beauty who has been becoming attractive to me lately, and the moon has been putting forth its dangerous spell over the tree tops, on a hill, and there's flowers, and insects chirping and everything quiet and soft music coming from the radio. Now, in all earnestness, I ask you, how can I think about what I ought to think about when I'm thinking about that? Oh well.

REPLYING TO A LETTER FROM A RESENTER OF THIS WEEK

Well, ole, Top, truly I regret that I cannot publish your lengthy letter this week. One reason is because I had this column already filled, another is that your letter is lengthy, and another reason is that you write too much about things that would tend to cause detrimental remarks, perhaps, rather than taking a humorous attitude, as you should do, in my opinion. I commend you on your command of English, it is good. You took a lot for granted, became personal regarding persons not concerned, and it appeared as if you were just peeved. But forget it, can't you recognize some good publicity in its various lines, when you see it? And by the by, in the future, may I ask that you do not become confused concerning the policies of this particular column, with that of other columns and writers, and that you address your envelopes to this column when writing again, if any. Replying to your direct question about those three persons, the answer is in the negative, neither to nor from, I can assure you. Letters to this column, unless properly addressed, have difficulty in getting attention.

I've been good and ready for our pastors to be getting back to their pulpits a long time ago, and I'm glad they are back now, because I enjoy their sermons. However, I did hear a rather good sermon the other day when E. C. Evans filled the pulpit at the Methodist church. Frankly, I didn't know he could preach like that, and I'm glad I heard him because now I like him better.

Doggonit, and a coupla confoundits! Something oughta be done about these freight trucks taking up about half the highway right in the main business section of town. I came very near bursting right into one the other day that was occupying half the street, and then maybe some, while it was unloading freight. I'd much rather see them have a freight depot of their own in town like they should have.

* * * *

And there's one of those metal, "Slow" signs down at the corner of Dief's, in the highway, that causes automobilists more trouble than a barrel of slippery eels. I've seen cars hit that thing and burst two tires at the trip, and many have ruined one tire, because at night the sign is hard to see and anyone not knowing it is there usually strikes it. Some fellows might get peeved about that sometime and take a notion to sue somebody for damages. I'd suggest that one of those rubber signs be placed there.

However, I liked Lamar Jeffers too, but since they had to go and change the districts up, I'm glad we got Buck Oliver.

THE USEFUL PLOW

Anonymous

A country life is sweet!
In moderate cold and heat,
To walk in the air how pleasant and fair!
In every field of wheat,
The fairest of flowers adorning the bowers,
And every meadow's brow;
So that I say, no courtier may
Compare with them who clothe in gray,
And follow the useful plow.

They rise with the morning lark,
And labor till almost dark,
Then, folding their sheep, they hasten to sleep
While every pleasant park
Next morning is ringing with birds that are singing
On each green, tender bough.
With what content and merriment
Their days are spent, whose minds are bent
To follow the useful plow.

WORK FOR PUBLIC SAFETY

Every state should officially inaugurate a "Save-a-Life" motor vehicle campaign this year.

Such campaigns have been tried in a number of eastern states with splendid results. Brakes, steering and lights are inspected and corrected and the need for safe and sane driving is brought home to the motorist. It is the common experience that the accident rate declines during the campaign and the period following.

Only organized effort can make progress against the increasing danger of our highways. The incompetent and the reckless have become genuine menaces to the lives and property of all. The sad toll of deaths and injuries mounts day by day, in spite of modernization of traffic laws in many states.

We must, through rigorous examination, make sure that the driver is capable of safely operating a car. Then we must, through "Save-a-Life" campaigns or similar movements, make sure that the car he drives is mechanically safe. Thereafter the problem comes down to individual responsibility and understanding. Education must be unremitting. The motorist, as an individual, must accept the responsibility that is his when he uses the public highways.

Automobiles cost more lives than wars. At a time when all the enlightened nations of the world are working for peace, it might likewise be well for them to concentrate on peacetime public safety.

LAST MAN'S CLUB

An imitation, with variations, of the famous Last Man's Club of Civil War veterans organized at Stillwater, Minn., more than half a century ago, is seen in the formation of a club of World War veterans in Edgar county, Illinois.

The Stillwater outfit put aside a bottle of wine to be drunk by the last survivor of the club. It is currently reported that when the "last man" opened his bottle it was found that the wine had turned to vinegar, probably in deference to the Prohibition law.

Somewhat different is the scheme of the Illinois veterans. Their Last Man's Club starts off with 100 members, each of whom is to contribute one dollar a year to the club's treasury. When the roll has been reduced to ten, the fund thus created is to be divided among these survivors.

From insurance company statistics it is estimated that this division of the "jack-pot" will occur about the year 1981. The ten survivors at that time would probably be between 80 and 90 years old.

Advancement in medicine and surgery in the meantime may possibly be the means of extending the lives of these veterans, so that the fund being created may not be distributed as soon as is now estimated. It is likely that some of them will still be alive when the year 2000 rolls around.

The Way of Life
by BRUCE BARTON

If

John Golden, who is a swell fellow as well as a smart one, told me that when he was in Chicago producing "Turn to the Right" one of the theatre attendants came to him and said a visitor wanted to see him.

"What does he want?" asked John.

"He wants to read you a play."

John threw his hands in the air. He was having enough troubles putting on one play without letting some unknown author inflict another.

The author returned two or three times, but John refused to see him

When the job in Chicago was done, he boarded a train and shut himself up in a drawing room, tired out. There came a timid knock; the door opened, and through it walked a young man with bushy hair, who looked fresh from the farm.

"Mr. Golden, my name is McAvoy," he said. "You were too busy to see me in Chicago, so I found out what train you were taking and I bought a ticket and want to ride with you as far asCleveland. I want to read you my play."

John fussed and fumed, but finally surrendered. The young man started to read, but John's mind absorbed nothing.

After a while the young man said: "Any time you are not interested, I'll stop."

"You can stop right now then," John answered.

With a pained look, the young man put away the manuscript and started for the platform. The train was pulling into Gary. He stepped off, took another train, and rode patiently back to Chicago.

When the next theatrical season opened in New York, John saw in the papers the advertisement of a play called "The Potters." The author's name struck him—McAvoy. Could it be the same young man who had bored him from Chicago to Gary?

It was the same young man. The play ran for months. IF John had listened to McAvoy he would have added another big hit to his list of successes.

IF, when I was editing a magazine, I had taken time to glance at a certain manuscript which came in from an unknown writer, I should have had the satisfaction of publishing "The Sport of Kings," the story that started Arthur Somers Roche on the road to fame.

IF I had listened carefully to what the president of a certain big company was saying to me one afternoon I might have made a great many thousand dollars.

IF . . . IF . . . IF . . . we all have these bothersome little words in our record. It's folly to waste time regretting them. The only intelligent attitude is to say "While I could have done much better, still I have had my share of good luck, and shall not grumble. Only, in the future, I'll try a little harder to keep my eyes and ears open."

For it is very difficult to tell when some wild and annoying visitor may be trying to force fortune upon us.

ALABAMA DECLARES WAR ON MAD DOGS

To lessen the number of mad dogs in Alabama each year and to protect the state against rabies, the Alabama State Board of Agriculture has ruled that "all dogs moved into Alabama shall have been given one or more immunizing injections of anti-rabies vaccine within six months prior to the time of movement into Alabama." This was recommended by Dr. C. A. Cary, State veterinarian.

Members of the Board of Agriculture which passed this regulation are: Seth P. Storrs, commissioner of Agriculture, chairman; M. J. Funchess, director of the Experiment Station, Auburn; R. J. Goode, Gastonburg; Glenn Foster, Tuscaloosa; W. F. Garth, Huntsville; J. Lloyd Abbott, Spring Hill and J. H. Witherington, Dothan.

CREATING LAWLESSNESS

Human nature—one of whose fundamental characteristics is the urge toward freedom—cannot be changed by legislation.

Age-old customs cannot be erased overnight by a law.

Here are truths that should be called to the attention of every lawmaker. An important reason for the prevalence of crime in America is that we have harassed the good citizen with a tremendous volume of hasty, unenforceable and ill-considered legislation. It will usually be found that law-abiding nations are those where the laws are designed to protect the rights of citizens, rather than to restrict them on the dubious theory that crime will thus be lessened.

We can not curb lawlessness by merely passing more needlessly restrictive laws to break.

There's no use mincing words about buying auto-bile tires. We are stating plain facts to you. Prices on MANSFIELD TIRES in our stock are lower than ever now. The quality of MANSFIELD TIRES is equal or better, and we are willing to go to the limit with you in comparing these tires with the tires of major manufacturers of the country and mail order houses.

These Prices Are Lower Than Ever

MANSFIELD --- 4-PLY		MANSFIELD --- 6-PLY H. D.
29 x 4.40	$4.95	29 x 4.40	$ 7.15
30 x 4.50	$5.65	30 x 4.50	$ 7.48
28 x 4.75	$6.65	28 x 4.75	$ 8.30
29 x 5.00	$7.00	29 x 5.00	$ 8.90
30 x 5.00	$7.10	30 x 5.00	$ 9.10
31 x 5.25	$8.55	31 x 5.25	$10.25

H. D. TRUCK CASINGS

30 x 5 — Heavy Duty—8-Ply .. 23.75

32 x 6 — Heavy Duty—10-Ply $39.50

Even Lower Than Mail Order Prices

Because these prices are so low, we are forced to quote them as cash prices. They are even lower than mail order house prices in instances, and you are not only keeping home town money at home, but when an adjustment is necessary due to a defective tire, we make that adjustment right at our station.

Mansfield is the fifth largest tire manufacturer in the world today and once you use a MANSFIELD TIRE you will readily see why they are growing in popularity. They are strong, well-built throughout, ready for the heat or cold that they will encounter on the road.

To enable you to purchase MANSFIELD TIRES, we have arranged to accept a part payment in chickens and eggs. That is something unusual about our purchasing plan which makes it easier for you, but bear in mind, the above prices are for cash only.

However, if you do not desire to pay cash for these first rate, well-built MANSFIELD TIRES, then we have also arranged whereby you can purchase one tire or a full set on our easy Time Payment Plan. Come in and ask about this new plan of ours.

SPORTSMANSHIP

The quality which perhaps more than any other distinguishes true sportsmanship is absence of temper. Those who notice accurately will find him dependably perfect in every ethical test or situation or impulse. The onlookers always choose him their favorite because he is "human." Every now and then his expression lights with a quick smile, a distinctly happy grin, or on the other hand a grimace on occasion of marked bad luck or bungled play. When he wins, he takes his satisfaction lightly—if he loses, he takes it good naturedly. Furthermore, when the game is finished. And the "why" he won or lost, or how he felt or played, is apparently gone out of mind.

As a matter of fact an admirable sportsman is merely one, who, having thoroughly learned the rules of each game that he attempts to play, can be counted on in every test of character as well as play, to behave as a gentleman.

Sportsmanship can be very well acquired by following a few simple rules: Keep your mind on the game, but not on your feelings. If you win, don't at once begin to fancy yourself a star in the firmament, above and apart from everybody else. A gloating winner is far more detested than a bad loser. But when you lose, don't sulk, or protest, or long-windedly explain. If you are hurt, whether in mind or body, don't nurse your bruises. Get up, and lightheartedly, courageously, good-temperedly, get ready for the next encounter. That is the only way to take life—that is also "playing" the game.

LODGE

Time always brings out the truth. We are beginning to learn a great many things about Henry Cabot Lodge that we did not know during his lifetime. The "scholar in politics," as he loved to be called, became a conspicuous figure when, in 1919, he led the cabal in the United States Senate which prevented our ratification of the Peace Treaty of Versailles. His personal venom against Woodrow Wilson was apparent at the time. Now it turns out from the disclosures made by ex-Secretary Fall that Senator Lodge expected that the Republican President elected in 1920 would make him Secretary of State, and that he was immensely disappointed when Mr. Harding picked Mr. Hughes for that position.

"I have known Henry Lodge since boyhood and I do not believe that he ever harbored a single generous impulse," said the late President Eliot of Harvard to a friend not long before his death.

ECONOMICS

The man or woman who has a job and whose wages or salary has not been reduced since the depression of 1929 is better off today than two years ago. In fact, a dollar will buy more today, in almost all of the necessaries of life and in every one of the luxuries, than at any time since before the war. The one exception is rents in the big cities.

About four-fifths of the people who work for a living in the United States are still employed regularly and at the same pay as before. About one-fifth are out of employment or on part time.

In Oaklahoma a mob of unemployed raided a grocery store the other day. In one rural county in Massachusetts, where I saw the records, 99 new automobiles and 54 new trucks were bought by farmers and village people during the month of June. These economic inequalities offer a problem which it is going to take more than one session of Congress to solve.

One of the biggest jobs that confronts the Capital is the rebuilding and refinancing of the nation's railroad system. Practically all the railroads today are in bad shape financially.

The success of the German experiment in running an air-propelled railroad car at the rate of 130 miles an hour means, to engineers, that all railroad transportation methods will have to be enormously speeded up in the course of the next few years.

The whole railroad situation calls for leadership of a kind which is not now in evidence. If Daniel Willard, President of the B. & O., were twenty years younger he could supply it. Somewhere in the railroad field there must be a young man who will come to the front in the next year or two and lead the railroads out of the wilderness.

Her marriage to Mr. Mackay is the culmination of a romance of several years standing. As he is one of the wealthiest men in America it is to be expected that Miss Case will now be able to do a great deal more for young singers even than she has done before.

Auburn, Ala., Aug. 5.—At the tenth annual convention in Auburn, July 30-31, the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation elected J. Litt Edwards of Selma as president for next year. He succeeded R. F. Croom who became president in May when Edward A. O'Neal resigned to become president of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

E. S. Pace of Eastaboga, Calhoun County, was elected first vice-president, and W. M. Hester, Russellville, second vice-president.

The president, two vice-presidents, and five others compose the executive committee, the five being H. F. Koonce, Florence; Dr. W. C. Braswell, Elba; L. M. Griffin, Moundville; J. H. Thompson, Fort Payne; and W. M. Harrison, Greenville.

E. L. Deal, secretary, was elected representative of the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation at the annual meeting of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

The organization adopted important resolutions. The income tax plan of taxation instead of the advalorem tax was endorsed and voters of the state urged to approve it when they go to the polls to vote on the proposals presented by the legislature at the recent session. The inheritance tax was endorsed also. Another resolution endorsed the Federal Farm Board and the agricultural marketing act creating the board. Operation of the government properties at Muscle Shoals for agriculture was endorsed also. Cooperation of the Farm Bureau with the industry of the State was endorsed as a permanent policy of the organization.

The meeting was largely attended by delegates who represented practically every county.

CHEVROLET WILL ERECT MILLION DOLLAR BUILDING

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 5.—Signing of contracts authorizing the erection of a special building at a construction cost of close to $1,000,000, to be devoted exclusively to the display of General Motors products at Chicago's International Exposition in 1933, is announced by W. S. Knudsen, president and general manager of the Chevrolet Motor Company.

Albert Kahn, architect, is now drawing up plans for the structure, which will have 100,000 square feet of display space and will be strategically located on the lake shore opposite 31st street, one of the main entrances to the Exposition grounds, in the transportation center.

A complete automobile assembly line in constant operation is one of the attractions planned for the new structure which will also contain the complete lines of all General Motors products, Mr. Knudsen said. This corporation is the first industrial concern to contract for the erection of a special display building on the Exposition grounds, officials said. Mr. Knudsen heads a committee of General Motors executives who will have charge of the project.

WHO LIKES HIS JOB?

Several instances have come to notice recently which seem to discredit the old theory that in order to be a success one should follow a congenial line of work.

It is said that the late Joseph Conrad, the most famous of recent authors of sea stories, hated the sea and detested writing.

O. O. McIntyre tells of a leading and successful New York theatrical producer who has a deep antipathy to actors and actresses and despises the theater; also a man who has made a fortune as a florist, but who does not care for flowers and is nauseated by their perfume.

Now comes Irving S. Cobb, one of America's most famous writers and humorists, with the statement that he utterly dislikes writing, but keeps at it because he doesn't want to be a loafer, or words to that effect.

The average newspaper man will tell you that he loathes the eternal grind, but somehow you could not drive him out of it. Many musicians suffer mental torture when before an audience—and so it goes.

These may be exceptions to the rule, but the lesson to be drawn from the instances noted is that determination to do good work will develop ability and bring success, whether one likes his job or not.

PHILIP'S MISSIONARY LABORS

Acts 8:26-40

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D.D

It may be hard to be turned aside from present activities to undertake some new work bue very often this change is a blessing in disguise. The changed field may produce far larger results than the one in which we are contentedly established. Philip was making great progress in Samaria with his revival. It was just the situation that most people would say needed the attention of the evangelist from Jerusalem who had already accomplished so much. God has the whole field in view and often needs an avtive worker for another location. It works that way in business and the system is not different in the spiritual realm.

He traveled south about 100 miles before any indication was reveled of the work for which he had left the company in Samaria. Then a man was observed in a chariot who was reading aloud. Again there is a direction from the Hodw Suirit and Philip accosts the treasurer of Candace, queen of the Ethiopians. This man had been to Jerusalem and while en route homeward was reading from Isaiah 53:7. This referred to the Messiah. Now the treasurer was a master at finances but poor in intrpreting scripture. Philip asks a qlestion which each pastor and other teachers of the Bible should propound: "Understandest thou what thou readest?" His offer to expound the Scriptures is accepted and Philip now enters upon an active ministry by the roadside.

Again there was a call to proceed northward and the convert is left that a work of evangelizing may be followed as far northward as Caesarea. The Golden Text sets forth the activity that should be performed by every be[illegible]: "They therefore that were scattered abroad went about preaching the [illegible]." Acts 8:4.

Girls Too Eager To Marry Are Problem For Psychologists

Recent reports on the psychological problems of modern young women indicate that one of the most frequent causes of mental difficulty is due to an over-eagerness for marriage, which upsets the mental and emotional balance of the patient.

"Probably every woman in the world —normal or abnormal—want to marry," says Mrs. Anne Bryan McCall in the Woman's Home Companion. "She wants to marry, openly and admittedly, or secretly, or unconsciously. The desire to marry is a perfectly natural thing. It has its basis in normal social and biological and psychological facts So it is not a girl's desire to marry that seems to psychologists in the least to be questioned; it is rather the stress she lays on it, the exaggerated accent she puts on it and the traits in herself that are to account for this.

"It is precisely here that a girl's psychology becomes important and is significant. If she is too personal and not clear-thinking, these traits will apply to the normal desire for marriage and the result will be a girl who is too personal in her desire for marriage—not clear-thinking about marriage, and too selfish about marriage.

"Men turn away from this type of girl. Men have their normal desires and instincts about marriage; and the average man generally turns (sometimes quite consciously and sometimes only instinctively) from a girl who is too personal, and selfish about a matter that is of such real importance.

"There is in men a certain age-old racial desire for attainment (we are rather stupidly apt to miscall it a desire for mastery) which makes them susceptible to those traits in women which would tend to encourage the fulfillment of that desire and which makes them withdraw from those traits in women which would seem to endanger that fulfillment. And the fact that a man is often mistaken in judging of these traits—so that he falls prey to a masterful woman who will spoil his attainment, when he thinks he is marrying one who will further it—does not alter the fundamental facts.

"All this concerns a general human psychology that explains why many men would apparently rather marry a frivolous girl or one who pretends she doesn't want to marry than one too openly bent on getting her own way."

ATHETE'S FOOT

By Dr. Christmas Seal

"Athlete's foot" is a miserable itching disease caused by a fungus growth of ringworm, giving little or no trouble in the daytime but disturbing many a person's rest at night.

The Journal of the American Medical Association recently published a remarkable article by Dr. W. L. Gould of Albany, New York, about a simple way in which the infection was cleared up in Albany Junior High School where hundreds of cases exist and the Alabama Association gladly passes this information on to you. Severe antiseptics had been used without success. Then there were installed footbaths containing from 10 to 15 per cent sodium thiosulphate. Each pupil using the gym immersed his feet in the chemical bath and it was renewed after being used by thirty to fifty students. In four weeks the ringworm infection had entirely disappeared from the Junior High school.

Sodium Thiosulphate is a safe antiseptic. It is without color or appreciable odor. Any druggist can supply it and it is so cheap that a quarter's worth will supply a whole family. The druggist will tell you how much to put in the water to make a ten per cent solution. It is well worth a trial for the ordinary case. The aggravated case with much ulcerated surface should have the personal treatment of a doctor.

Mrs. D. W. Haskew Hostess To "As You Like It" Club.

PIGEON VETERAN DIES

"Charlie," veterans of many battlefields, is dead. He was a famous carrier pigeon, stationed at Lille, France, during four years of German occupation of that city, from which he carried hundreds of important messages to the allied generals, sent by his owner, an Englishman named Richardson.

Charlie's services were recognized by the French government by a pension of two francs a month granted him since the war. He was buried with military honors.

Throughout the World War hundreds of carrier pigeons were employed as message bearers and many authentic stories of real heroism on the part of these wonderful birds have been told. One that is remembered was that of a pigeon which carried a message through shell torn territory, was wounded to death while on the wing, but delivered its message and expired in the hands of the officer who received it.

Human beings never display greater courage and fidelity than that.

Mrs. Randolph Chandler of Lakeland, Fla., is the guest of her sister, Mrs. J. J. Wade, and Mr. Wade. Mrs. Chandler has numerous friends in Clanton who are glad to see her again.

SEVERAL PEOPLE IN WEST END BIT BY MAD KITTEN

Pet Kitten Bites Mistress and Test Showed Hydrophobia; Children Victims

The community of West End Heights xperienced quite an exciting time last riday and Saturday and all on account of a half-grown cat, belonging o Mrs. Will Hays.

The kitten was a friendly and playul little fellow and was a favorite with ll the kids living near to the home of Mrs. Hays, and all of them played with t, more or less, daily.

The first thing that indicated that nything was wrong with the little cat, hile its mistress was busy about her ooking, it suddenly ran up and bit her n the ankle. Mr. Hays came in soon nd did not like the situation so he ook the cat out and killed it, cut off he head and sent it to the Health Deartment at Montgomery and in a little ime received a telegram stating that he cat had hydrophobia.

Then things began to happen. Mothrs called up their kids and soon began o learn that quite a number of them ad been bitten or scratched in their lay with the unfortunate cat.

A check up was made and an order ent through Dr. Napoleon Johnson for he anti-toxin treatment and the folowing victims are now calling on Dr. ohnson daily for their shot:

Mrs. Will Hays, son, J. C. and son, William Lee, Mrs. Dr. Odum, Louie ones, son of Mrs. Betty Jones, Nellie ones, daughter of Mrs. Walter Jones, Ewart and Ethel Corley, son and aughter of Mrs. W. B. Corley, and litle Earl Corley, his grandson.

EIGHT YEAR OLD FARMER SENDS IN BOLL OF COTTON

The News received through the mails last week a well filled boll of cotton from the 1931 crop. This came from the fields of one of the County's youngest farmers, Judson Strock, Jr., who lives at Verbena.

If the field of Judson's cotton is all like the boll sent in, then he will be pretty busy now picking cotton. This is the first dry boll of cotton sent to the News office from the 1931 crop, and to Judson Strock, Jr., of Verbena goes this credit. We would like to have Judson drop in the News office when in Clanton.

UNITY - CHILTON COUNTY SUNDAY SCHOOL CONV. 4

Associations Hold Joint Convention at Mulberry Baptist Church, Aug. 4

On last Tuesday August 4, what is said to have been one of the most successful Sunday School Conventions, was held by the Unity-Chilton County Baptist Sunday School Convention, at Mulberry Baptist church. Mr. G. F. Harris, secretary, gives us the following report:

The annual meeting of the Unity-Chilton County Baptist Sunday School Convention was held with Mulberry Baptist church Tuesday, August 4.

A very interesting program was prepared and carried out. The different phases of the Sunday school work were discussed during the day. It was the opinion of many that it was the best session of the convention ever held.

We are indebted to Mr. J. N. Barnett of the Sunday School Board, Nashville, Tenn., and Mr. Davis Cooper of the Alabama State Board for the great part they rendered in making the meeting a success.

At the noon hour a bounteous table was spread by the good ladies of the community.

It was decided that it would be for the best interest of the work to separate the two associations and have two conventions in the future. Accordingly officers were elected as follows:

Chilton County Association: Howard Oden, President; J. E. Minor and Donald Merchant, Vice Presidents; T. F. Wyatt, secretary-treasurer. Unity Association: H. A. Harris, President; C. D. Hughes and W. J. Patrick, Vice Presidents: G. F. Harris, secretary-treasurer.

The time and place of the next annual meeting were not decided.

CLANTON PILOT CLUB MET TUESDAY NIGHT THIS WEEK

The Clanton Pilot Club held its regular meeting at the Methodist church Tuesday night of this week. The meeting was given over to business, and plans for the next few months were discussed.

Among other things, the Pilot Club, has decided to start the ball to rolling to get a park for our city. Though the movement has just started, a site has been suggested, and it is planned to have representatives go before the Town Council at its next meeting and ask for their cooperation in this movement.

Clanton can and should have a park. The place which has been suggested, the nice spot of woodland, about halfway between the business part of town and the grammar school, should prove satisfacory. The Pilot club is to be commended for taking the lead in this movement.

IMPORTANT MEETING FOR FARMERS 15TH

Demonstration Field Showing Benefit of Nitrates Will Be Viewed

Local farmers will have a good chance to show their ability at estimating crop yields at the field meeting scheduled in Tom Hilyer's field on W. C. Robinson place, near Cooper, August 15, Saturday.

The meeting has been arranged by County Agent C. E. Stapp to show the progress of the cotton-fertilizing demonstration at the Hilyer farm. The object of the demonstration is to show the importance of quick-acting nitrogen on local soils. The demonstration field is divided into two sections, both of which received the same amount of phosphate and potash at planting. One of the plots received in addition 50 pounds of Chilean Nitrate of Soda per acre at planting and 150 pounds of nitrate as a side-dressing shortly after the crop was chopped.

When farmers visit the demonstration they will be invited to estimate the

CLANTON GROUP MAKES FISHING TRIP TO GULF

Local Fisherman Catch Lots of Fish, and Bring Back 70-Pound Shark

Last Monday morning it was noticed that quite a group of people were gathered around an automobile just across the street from Upchurch Drug Company and in front of Farmers Hardware Company. A representative of the News, always on the lookout for any excitement, investigated and found the center of attraction to be a 70-pound shark. This was the prize catch of a group of Clanton fishermen who made a trip to Panama City the past week end for some real sea fishing

The party was composed of J. W. McEathern, Loren Smith, Johnnie Plier, M. D. Foshee, Jr., A. L. "Jelly" Bean and Dick Kemp, all noted for their prowess in handling the reel and rod. They left Clanton early Saturday night and made a quick trip to their destination. When they arrived at Panama City they made arrangement for their outing and got busy right away

BOYS CLUB CAMP IS BEING HELD ON RIVER THIS WEEK

Approximately 125 Boys Are Taking Part in Annual Outing This Year

Bright and early Wednesday morning it was observed that boys were grouped around Mr. Stapp's office, and more arriving all the time. Upon inquiry it was learned that the boys were on their way to the annual 4-H Club Camp. This year the camp will be held on Coosa River on the backwaters of Lay Dam. The site of the camp is located a short distance above the dam.

Mr. Stapp stated that probably there would be about 125 to 150 boys included in the camp activities this year.

This camp is something the club boys have come to look forward to each summer, as it gives them a fine outing, and at the same time, there is always a good program scheduled, which makes the time spent profitable as well.

It is planned to break camp Friday afternoon, August 14, making the camp a three-day affair. we were not able to obtain names of all those on the program for the three days, but it was stated that each day would see worth while numbers. It is planned to have addresses by prominent men and women in their respective vocations. Thus the boys will have expert advice and assistance along the lines of camp sanitation, vesper services, talks by lawyers, bankers, etc., so that the time spent in camp will be of great value in obtaining a better grasp of the conditions with which we have to deal.

G. T. WILBANKS GETTING BETTER SINCE ACCIDENT

The many friends of Mr. G. T. Wilbanks will be pleased to learn that he is again able to be out and begin to look like himself. No doubt he will, ere long, be entirely recovered.

About the first of last April, while putting out his commercial fertilizer, the wind blew some of the dust from the mixture into his eyes. His eyes inflamed and grew worse and worse and he soon was confined to his home and bed. He took a hospital treatment in Montgomery but his condition did not improve. Then he went for treatment to a Birmingham clinic with about the same result. Returning he resigned himself to his fate.

For about four months he suffered intense agonies, but finally an improvement seemed to take place and now he looks almost himself again. He is very grateful to his friends for their kindness, sympathy and takes this method of telling them of his improvment and expressing his thanks.

HIGH SCHOOLS SCHEDULED TO OPEN SEPT. 7TH

Short Term Or Elementary Schools, Will Have Opening Day October 5

According to information reaching the News office from the office of the County Superintendent of Education Buford Lawrence, steps have been taken and plans are underway to get the different schools of the county in readiness for an early opening. Supt. Lawrence stated that the long term schools will begin work on September seventh. The long term schools include those high schools in the county under the supervision of the county department of education. They are Chilton County High School, Jemison High School, Verbena, Isabella and Maplesville High Schools.

It was also stated that the short term schools of the county, or the elementary schools, will begin their work on the fifth of October.

Just how long the schools of the county will be able to run this season cannot yet be definitely stated. The funds of the county have been reduced because of the failure of the state to appropriate as much money as usual, and due to this all the schools may have to be closed earlier than usual this school year.

MANY FARMERS PLAN TO MAKE TRIP TO AUBURN

Co. Agent Stapp Has Made Arrangements For Trip To Auburn, Aug. 18

Plans are going forward with great interest being shown in the efforts of County Agent C. E. Stapp to get as many of the farmers of Chilton County to make a trip to Auburn Tuesday, August 18th. Mr. Stapp states that several hundred farmers of this section have made plans to go, and that he is expecting more. Now, when there is not so much rush in the farmers work, is an ideal time to make this trip. Also while tht crops are in full growth is a good time to judge the experiments which are being conducted at Auburn. According to Mr. Stapp there are now some three or four experiments being carried out at Auburn, either of which will be worth the trip to any farmer in this section.

This is to be an all-day trip, leaving early Tuesday morning and coming back home the same day. It is planned to go by way of Wetumpka, making the distance about ninety miles to Auburn, with good roads. It is estimated that with four or five men to an automobile, the actual cost of the trip will amount to about one dollar each. A days outing will do most of us good, and this can be accomplished with little cost and much profit. For, without doubt, the Experiment Station at Auburn, with its staff of trained experts, can be of untold service to any farmer in Alabama.

Those who plan to go, and have not yet notified Mr. Stapp, are requested to do so at their earliest conveniece.

West Chilton News

Just a few words from West Chilton. Again I am very glad to say that crops here are good, generally. Have been having plenty of rain here of late, which has added growth to the crops. Down here for about ten weeks we thought that we would miss a corn crop and it was cut short a great deal. Watermelons and cantaloupes are good here, but are not selling so very well on the market. Most all the truck crops down here are hauled to the Birmingham market.

Miss Merna Edith Robinson has been in Birmingham for the past three weeks visiting relatives and friends, and reports that she is having a very good time.

Mrs. J. M. Wyatt and daughter, Lillie, of Selma are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Erby Wyatt of this community.

Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Robinson, Miss Lillie Wyatt motored to Birmingham Sunday afternoon to spend the first part of the week with friends.

We are very sorry to hear that Mrs. Joe Chatman is sick; also that Mr. Jacob Smith is very low.

The Death Angel visited the home of Mr. Chapman Saturday at three p.m. and carried away his wife. She was a devoted wife and mother. She leaves four sons, Ben, Joe, John and James; one daughter, Mrs. Huston Pate, and husband, Mr Allen Chapman, who now is eighty-odd years of age. Mrs. Chapman will be missed by a host of relatives and friends of this community. She was laid to rest at Shady Grove church. Rev. Spinks conducted the funeral service, which was a very nice one. Let me say, weep not, children, and husband and friends, for I am persuaded to believer that all things work together for good to those who love the Lord, that are called according to His purpose, and surely this is God's business when He will call His children home. Then let us live so that when the good Lord calls us home that we will be prepared to receive the crown that is laid up for us in Heaven, and where we will meet our loved ones who have gone on before, and rejoice and sing His praise forevermore, and won't that be a glorious day for all, amen.

ORCHESTRA LEADER URGES REVIVAL OF OLD "HITS"

A good tune is always a good tune, whether it was composed yesterday or a decade ago, according to B. A. Rolfe, director of the Luck Strike Dance Orchestra, who is constantly reviving popular songs of past years and presenting them in their original form on his radio programs.

"A melody, which at one time was good enough to claim the attention of a nation, should not be permitted to pass completely into oblivion" believes Rolfe, whose orchestra's claim to fame has largely been through its distinctive rendition of the "tunes that made Broadway, Broadway." To perpetuate these old "hits" and to provide a dependable and representative source for his selections, Rolfe said that he had compiled a musical library, containing more than 6,000 orchestrations of numbers written since 1900, with each orchestration accompanied by a chart containing full data on the degree of popularity it had attained.

Only 30 years old and married six times, Mrs. Eugenia-Hoyt-Butt-Lee-White of Hollywood, Cal., says she is just an "incurable optimist" when it comes to matrimony.

Hints for Homemakers

By Jane Rogers

A FINAL touch that enhances the savor of fruit salads and certain vegetable salads is obtained by sprinkling the lettuce leaf base lightly with a simple syrup made of sugar and orange juice, or lemon juice. This should be done immediately before serving so that the lettuce will lose none of its desirable crispness.

Rust in ovens is due mostly to moisture that develops from baking or broiling. If the oven door is kept open for twenty minutes after use the moisture will evaporate and remove the cause of rust.

SOWING AND REAPING

Galatians 6:1-10

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

This quarterly temperance lesson also suggests a profitable study for these summer days. One of the epistles of Paul furnishes the lesson text. Search out all the thirteen or fourteen letters that he wrote and relate them to the historical account in the Acts.

Moral problems faced the people in that day and these letters deal very directly with human affairs. Since the same difficulties are with us today we find even greater help in these same writings for Paul. Read the entire letter and note how the grace of God was superseding the hard and fast laws under which the Old Testament of Hebrew sought to live.

Everybody makes mistakes and the apostle tells that those who are making the fewest mistakes should be most kindly disposed toward those who sin to a greater extent. There are certain burdens that we must bear for ourselves, such as the kit that the traveler or soldier carries for his daily necessities.

The Golden Text is just plain common sense as well as spiritual truth: "Whatsoever a man soweth THAT shall he also reap." That is certain in the material world and not the less positive in the spiritual realm. Wild oats take nourishment from the soil and produce their own crop. Alcoholic liquor is habit-forming and death dealing, no matter how slowly the poison may work. A single glass has its effect on the brain cells and lessens the power of self-direction. Turn to the newspapers for this week to get more illustrations than can be presented during the class session. Big business will have nothing to do with it. Alcohol takes away personal liberty and is destructive of body and soul.

D. W. Haskew

Out in Lincoln, Neb., a farmer met with a great misfortune. An army of grasshoppers visited his farm and played havoc with his growing crop. He caught a few and carried them to the office of the Entomologist and it was discovered that the hoppers would make the best kind of fish bait. The farmer went back to his farm, employed all the help that he could use. The hoppers were rounded up and handed over to the Chemist, and soon he was shipping fish bait to Michigan and other states. His grasshopper crop brought him more cash money than the growing crop would have produced. That is what I call an enterprising farmer. He knew how to turn his misfortune into fortune. Many, many things come to the farmer that carries untold wealth, if they will just get busy and turn them into things of value. A man is a real man when he can turn his misfortune into fortune.

I ate dinner at a certain home in Fort Deposit where the boy in the home was the proud owner of two ducks. They were educated ducks. They were trained to rely on their owner for every drop of water and every piece of food that went toward their support. Early in the morning the two ducks would come to the back steps and a duck would perch on each end of the step. Together they would set up, "Quack, Quack, Quack," until the boy would come out to feed them. In a few hours they would be back on the same steps calling, "Quack, Quack, Quack," wanting more to eat. They hunted nothing for themselves, but when they were hungry or thirsty, they would perch on the steps and "Quack," until they were satisfied. There is much flesh in this world that carries no feathers, that can be found sitting close to food supplies, and about all that the flesh is doing is calling, "Quack, Quack," and waiting for some one to feed. The "Quack, Quack" kind of callers in human society are the pest of this age, and the great misfortune of this period of depression. May the good Lord deliver us from the covey of "Quackers" who locate themselves on the doorstep.

I was passing a home and a little girl was out in the front yard making mud patties. She was having a good time, but just then the voice of the mother was heard, calling her into the house. She was asked to go out to the wood house and bring in some wood for the stove. The little child set up a yell. She objected to being interfered with as she was playing in the back yard. She did not mind the work of making mud pies, but when it came to doing something worth while, something that would help and that carried value, she set up howl. How true that is to the life of the young. Little girls grow to be big girls, and when they are asked to give up an auto trip, a picnic, a night of revelry, that they may be able to help mother, they set up a groan. You would think that a mad cat was being persecuted if the girl is asked to wash the dishes. Little boys grow to be great big boys, and when they are asked to do something that is worth while they growl and groan. If they are left to make mud pies, they are happy. Too many parents are letting their boys and girls make mud pies when they should be busy doing things that are worth while.

Before coming to Clanton I heard a church member airing his views of his pastor who had kindly insisted that his church pay his salary up to date. This member of the church was indignant because his pastor had mentioned the matter of his salary before the audience at church. He said that he thought that a preacher should accept what was paid and say nothing. I happened to be in a place of business when this same fellow came in to collect a bill that was due him. He walked right up to the fellow due him money, and shoved a bill under his nose. The man was silent. Then the bill pusher asked his creditor what he was going to do about it. The man tried to explain, but the collector grew red in the face, and the man due the money had his funeral preached. Wish that I knew why people have the idea that a preacher should be so sweet and nice about his salary when it is over due, and yet they step so high when people are due them money. What is good for the goose is good for the gander. If you want money that is due you, do not be angry with the preacher when he wants the money that is long since due him.

Down in the Fiji islands the inhabitants call a pig a "Short pig" and they call a man a "Long pig." Those people in that far away land must have made a few visits to the United States. I was going to Montgomery last Wednesday and as I was rounding a curve I met a "Long pig" driving a car. That Long pig had his side of the road and mine. There was nothing left for me to do but to quit the pavement in order to save my life. "Road hogs" are a menace to our highways. I will blush while I say it, but all the road hogs are not of the male variety.

Was in the company of a man who did all the talking. He never allowed me to wedge in a word. Conversation has often been compared to tennis. The pleasure of the game comes from the way the ball is returned. Most men and women who talk too much are saying an "Infinite deal of nothing."

Two hours before he was to have been operated on for appendicitis, Pete Mancuso, serving a five-year sentence, escaped from prison at Omoha.

When Willard Robinson of Evanston, Ill., failed to keep a date with Miss Johanna Donnely, search found him in his bath tub, reading magazines.

Convicted of operating a still, Jo Riddley, 99, was sent to jail in Fred erick County, Va.

"My duties kept me so busy I neve had a chance to swim; now I'm swim ming," explained Lynette Kemp afte she resigned as a life guard in Joliet Ill.

LIFE INSURANCE POLICY

If you own an Insurance Policy

You owe it to yourself and to your dependents to give careful attention to the transportation problems that confront America today. You should protect your protection by patronizing the railroads, for the great life insurance companies of America have invested practically 20% of the money that you have paid them in premiums in railroad securities, and unless the railroads are restored to a sound earning basis, the value of these securities will be seriously lessened.

The magnitude of the investment by life insurance companies in rail securities may be appreciated when these facts are considered: Each man, woman and child in the United States is, on the average, protected to the extent of $900.00 by life insurance and each family to the extent of $3,900.00. At the time this announcement is being prepared there is an astounding total of one hundred and eight billion dollars worth of life insurance in effect in the United States, with a total of sixty-eight million individual policies. If you are one of these policy-holders, you are in reality a part owner of the railroads and therefore you should be exerting every effort to preserve the safety of your interests.

Railroad operation and earning capacity are being threatened by the unfair and poorly-regulated invasion of competitive transportation agencies. The railroads are not attacking any form of transportation, but are simply appealing to the fairmindedness of the American people, so that all public carriers shall be operated under the same restrictions and regulations, and with equalization of taxation. ¶ Travel by train, ship by train, patronize the steam railroads of America, and you will not only be getting the finest, safest and most satisfactory form of transportation the world has ever known, but you will also be protecting your protection, by assisting the railroads in earning a fair return on their properties.

The Railroads Must Earn To Spend

The railroads built this nation. They must continue to be the backbone of its transportation system. See that they get a square deal.

"HOW ABOUT SOME HOT WATER"

WHAT a familiar sound! Evening papers or bridge games deserted for the second or third time to relight the heater. Isn't it easy to remember the countless times such a shout has echoed through the house—some night you'd intended to be so restful, or some rushed school morning when every second meant a minute? The logical solution to your hot water problem is an automatic electric water heater. It never has to be lighted—it will supply as much hot water as your family wants ANY TIME they want it bowel trouble

Constipation may very easily become chronic after forty. And any continued constipation at that time of life may bring attacks of piles and a host of other unpleasant disorders.

Watch your bowels at any age. Guard them with particular care after forty. Whenever they need any help, remember a doctor should know what is best for them.

"Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin" is a doctor's prescription for the bowels. Tested by 47 years' practice, it has been found thoroughly effective in relieving constipation and its ills for men, women and children of all ages. It has proven perfectly safe even for babies. Made from fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients, it cannot gripe; will not sicken you or weaken you; can be used without harm as often as your breath is bad, or when your tongue is coated; whenever a headachy, bilious gassy condition warns of constipation

Farm Progress Is Related By Agents

Auburn, Ala., — The county demonstration agents of Alabama continued to send to the Extension Service of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn reports indicating a "forward march" of Alabama agriculture.

The most important progress revealed by the recent report is that of preparations for planting seed of Austrian peas and hairy vetch this fall. This will be done to enrich the land, and for a feed crop. Seed are being bought cooperatively through the state and county Farm Bureaus. Basic slag, a by-product of the steel industry of the Birmingham district, will be used as a fertilizer.

Another bright spot reported was that Bullock County is expected to produce this year the largest corn crop in the history of the county, according to County Agent J. H. Nunn.

In Wilcox County the annual cotton crop has increased from 11,000 bales in 1 28 to 13,000 in 1929, and 16,000 in 1930. W. A. Cammack, county agent, began work in that county four years ago.

In Randolph County winter gardens are being planted on a larger scale. Such is being advised by County Agent L. M. Hollingsworth.

Plans have been made by the Pickens County Farm Bureau for the distribution of feeds to the farm people, said County Agent F. A. Rew.

In Coosa County, Sidney Z. Mitchell, now of New York, has bought 15,000 acres of land and is establishing the "Ann Jordan Hunting Preserve." Sam Day, county agent, is directing planting of feed crops and also an orchard.

Baldwin County recently sold cooperatively 55,000 pounds of wool. The sale was made by J. D. Moore, livestock marketing specialist of Auburn, and E. E. Hale, county agent. Wool brought 16 cents per pound.

THE CIVIL LEGION

Among the genuinely patriotic organizations of the United States is the Civil Legion, composed of men who served the nation in official civil capacities during the World War. War governors of the several states, members of non-military war boards and commissions, and others who gave their services in the prosecution of necessary war activities at home are eligible for membership.

It is the announced desire of the Civil Legion to cooperate closely with the American Legion in all matters pertaining to the national defense. In fact, it is expected that a resolution will be passed by the American Legion at its coming national convention endorsing the Civil Legion and formally accepting this cooperation.

In seeking a closer affiliation with former military men, the Civil Legion declares that it "has never and will not engage in any financial enterprise or adventures of any kind," and that it "seeks no appropriations of contributory gifts."

By keeping alive the patriotic spirit which animated their members during the war, both the American Legion and the Civil Legion may further contribute to the safety of the nation in case another war should unhappily occur. But neither desires to see another war, and both may be depended upon to use every honorable means to prevent such a calamity.

SAFETY FOR SWIMMERS

The following advice for swimmers, issued by the Red Cross life savers, is timely and word heeding:

Learn to swim. This means every member of your family.

If you get in water over your head don't become panic-stricken. Keep your hands under water, pushing down. This will keep your head out, making it possible for you to breathe.

Don't swim in unprotected places.

Don't dive into water unless you are sure of its depth.

Keep your small children near you at the beach.

Don't use automobile inner tubes as floats.

Don't duck children or grownups. It creates fear.

Don't swim alone, regardless of your ability.

Don't swim past the life-lines. It takes just as much ability to swim in water five feet deep as it does in water 500 feet deep.

Don't swim for at least an hour and a half after eating.

Learn the prone-pressure method of resuscitation.

MEMENTO OF A WAR ACE

The heroism of Major Raoul Lufbery, noted French-American war ace, will be remembered by thousands who will from time to time look upon the airplane compass used in his last fatal flight, which was deposited in the Smithsonian Institution in Washington a few days ago.

Lufbery was officially credited with shooting down 17 German planes, and his comrades assert that he really brought down more than twice that number, before his death near Tours, France, May 19, 1918. On his last flight his plane caught fire, and Lufbery jumped without a parachute to his doom.

His compass was salvaged from the burned plane by a French soldier, and given to an army surgeon, who tried to find some member of Lufbery's family to whom he might present it, but without success. After passing through several hands the compass was finally given to the museum of the Smithsonian Institution.

Lufbery was born in France, but was reared in Wallingford, Conn., becoming an adventurer and soldier of fortune. He joined the famous Lafayette Escadrille, composed of Americans who entered the air service of France early in the war. When the United States became an active participant in the struggle he was transferred to the American air force.

His aerial exploits were among the most brilliant of the war, and it is well that he may be remembered through the exhibition of his flame-seared compass in the national capital.

THE WAR ON POLIO

The term "polio" is a somewhat recent designation for the dread disease more commonly known as infantile paralysis. It is really an abbreviation, or simplification, of the word "poliomyelitis," the medical term for this malady.

While peculiarly a disease of children adults are by no means exempt from it. Perhaps the most prominent American who has suffered from polio in recent years is Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt of New York. His almost complete recovery, through scientific treatment, has strongly brought to attention the fact that the disease does not necessarily make its victim a permanent cripple.

In gratitude for his own recovery, and in a desire to place proper treatment within the reach of all who are similarly afflicted, Governor Roosevelt has recently taken the lead in a national crusade against polio.

At Warm Springs, Ga., where the governor's cure was effected, there has been organized a non-profit making foundation, under the presidency of Dr. [illegible] timore, also a polio victim, who has been a patient there since last April.

The need for such an organization is emphasized by the fact that there are more than 300,000 cases of infantile paralysis in the United States at present and the number is increasing. The movement for the eradication of this blighting disease should have the hearty support of humanitarians and philanthropists everywhere.

CHAPTER XXXVI

It was always stimulating to one's morale to visit the headquarters of the Canadians, where one soon caught the fine spirit of that superb body.

I made such a visit in the spring of 1918 and talked with their corps commander, Lieut. Gen. Sir Arthur Currie; his chief of staff, Major General Weber; his chief of engineers, Major General Lindsay, and others and had tea with them.

The alertness and confidence of these neighbors of ours and the excellent record they had made and were still making gave us as much gratification as though they had been our own. I remember this visit with much pleasure and recall the prediction of the Canadians that Americans would soon play an important part in the war.

General Currie deplored the fact that the British had so easily given up Passchendaele ridge, which the year before he had been told must be taken at all costs and for which the Canadians made the tremendous sacrifice of 16,000 casualties.

Calls at British G. H. Q.

At the invitation of Sir Douglas Haig, British commander in chief, I went to the British general headquarters April 20 to discuss the training of our troops with the British and study operations in progress.

We were always made welcome at British headquarters. It so happened that on the day of our arrival Lord Derby, who had just been relieved as minister of war by Lord Milner, was there en route to Paris as British ambassador. During dinner the conversation ran along freely, as though we were members of the official family. At length Lord Derby and Sir Douglas drifted to the subject of British politicians.

It would betray no confidence to say that there was considerable criticism of some who held prominent places. The coalition government came in for its share because of its attitude toward the military high command.

I took advantage of the opportunity while on the British front to visit the Nordaques area to inspect the advance elements of the Seventy-seventh division, one of the divisions selected for training with the British. We took luncheon with Brig. Gen. Evan M. Johnson, then temporarily in command, and his staff officers. He praised the soldierly qualities of the men, but said they were very much behind in their training.

Makes Agreement With Haig.

At Sir Douglas' headquarters he and I reached an understanding as to the training and administration of our troops that were to be temporarily with the British. In the first place, they were to be allocated by regiments to British skeleton divisions under such a schedule as might be agreed upon. The training staffs of British divisions were to be at the disposal of these regiments, especially for instruction in the use of the rifle and machine gun and the handling of gas.

After that, and with the approval of their American division commander, the regiments were to be attached to a British division in line, so each of the three battalions of the regiment would have the opportunity to serve with one of the three brigades in each British division. These battalions were to be commanded by their own officers as a part of the British brigade, while the staff of the American regiment was to be attached to that of the brigade.

In the next stage the American regiments, with their three battalions united under the regimental commander, were to act as a brigade in a British division. The final stage would find the four American regiments of each division united as such under its own officers, the artillery being British until the arrival of its own artillery brigade.

In carrying out this scheme the tendency at first was for British officers actually to assume command of our units in training. Our officers in most cases permitted this to be done until it was checked by my orders that "American units must be commanded in training by the officers and noncommissioned officers who are to command them in battle," and that American troops would in all cases be commanded in battle only by Americans.

Talks Shipping in London.

Following a suggestion by Lord Milner, I went to London April 22, 1918, to consider further the shipment of American troopers. At our first conference there were present Lord Milner and Gen. Sir Henry Wilson, who had succeeded General Robertson as the chief of the general staff; Harbord and myself. The main point of difference that had developed in previous conferences as to just how far the Americans should be committed to serve in active operations was again considered.

I stated that the main thing was to get our units trained, and that while I was opposed to amalgamation, yet if during the period of instruction the units with which they were serving should be attacked or, if another great emergency should arise, of course, our men would go in. Naturally the British wanted unlimited infantry and machine-gun units, but I would consider nothing further than a limited extension of the six-division plan.

During the conference a cable from Lord Reading to the prime minister was brought forth, which stated that the President had agreed to the amalgamation of Americans with the British. I had nothing official at hand later than the President's conditional approval of joint note No. 18 of the supreme war council as suggested by Secretary Baker, so I promptly said that it could not be possible that any such concession had been made and that the classes of our troops to be shipped over and their disposition must be left to me.

Agree on Troop Shipments.

As a result of these discussions we reached an agreement which provided for the shipment in May by British and American tonnage of the infantry, machine gun, engineer and signal troops, together with the various unit headquarters, of six divisions for training with the British army. It was provided that any shipping in excess of the amount required for this number of troops should be utilized to transport the artillery of these divisions; also that such personnel as might be required to build up corps organizations should then follow, it being understood that the artillery regiments would train with the French and join their proper divisions when this was completed.

To meet any emergency that might require an excess of infantry after the completion of this program, it was agreed that all the American and British shipping available for the transportation of troops was to be used under such arrangement as would insure immediate aid to the allies, and thereafter as far as possible provide other units necessary to complete the organization of our divisions and corps.

It was further agreed that the combatant troops mentioned in connection with May shipments should be followed by such services of supply and other contingents as we ourselves might consider necessary, the shipment of a large number of these troops should be utilized at my discretion, except that the six divisions which the British were to transport would be trained with them.

Washington Makes Concession.

Reaching Chaumont, I found that a cablegram dated April 26 had been received, transmitting a memorandum dated April 19, that had been sent by direction of the President to the British ambassador at Washington in conformity with his approval of note No. 18. In this memorandum the shipment of 120,000 infantry and machine-gun units per month for four months was conceded, with the understanding that their assignment for training and use should be left to my discretion.

It went on to say that the United States, until the situation changed, had no intention of departing from as full compliance with the recommendation of the permanent military representatives as the nature of the case would permit.

This was the first official information I had received that the administration had agreed to send any specific numbers of infantry and machine-gun units to France.

Lord Reading's Influence.

This concession went further than it was necessary to go and much further than I had expected. Realizing the complications that might arise from commitments so far in the future and the delay in forming an American army that would follow, I did not agree in later discussions at the supreme war council with all that the allies now felt justified in demanding. I was opposed to the action of the supreme war council in assuming the power under any circumstances to dispose of American troops. It was not in any sense a prerogative of the supreme war council.

There can be little doubt that Lord Reading received the distinct impression from President Wilson that infantry and machine-gun units would be sent to France at the rate of 120,000 men per month for four months, beginning with April. That the President agreed to this "in principle" is practically certain. It need not be further emphasized that such a concession, even though prompted by the most generous impulse, could only add to the difficulties of our task of building up an army of our own.

It is probable that Lord Reading, skilled advocate that he was, did more while ambassador at Washington to influence the administration to grant allied requests than any other individual.

CHAPTER XXXVII

I left London April 25, 1918, and crossed to France in a British destroyer. Colonel Mott was at Boulogne with a request for me from General Foch to come to Sarcus. I learned then that the Twenty-second division, at Seicheprey, had repulsed a severe trench raid on the night of April 20-21, and had suffered considerable loss.

Arriving at General Foch's headquarters I found Generals Bliss, Harbord and Weygand already there, and after dinner we entered into a general discussion about American troop shipments. The conversation ran as follows:

Foch—On March 28 you came to offer the services of American troops. I have a vivid recollection of the occasion. As to the American divisions, in what order do you think they should be employed?

Pershing—The order would be the Twenty-sixth, Forty-second, Second. (The First had already been sent to an active front near Amiens.) The regiments of the Thirty-second will be ready by May 1.

Foch—I do not think they can be used before May 5, but the more we put into the line the better it will be. Your Seventy-seventh division has arrived, I see. What about the Third and Fifth?

Pershing—The infantry of the Third has arrived, and that of the Fifth will soon follow.

Pershing Stands Firm.

Foch—What we need now is infantry, especially the British, on account of the present crisis. That is why the supreme war council at Versailles recommended that all tonnage be devoted to that purpose for the time being. I hope that America may send over as much infantry as possible during the next three months. The other arms to complete your divisions can come afterward. What do you think of that plan?

Pershing—I cannot commit myself to such a proposition. If nothing but infantry and machine gunners are brought over, to the total of 300,000, it will be October or November before the artillery and auxiliary troops could arrive, and we could not foresee the formation of an American army until next spring.

Foch—I think your calculation is rather pessimistic, for we could begin bringing your other troops in August, but without considering that point we can furnish you with artillery and its personnel and you can have your divisions reconstituted beginning with October. What would you propose in this connection?

Pershing—I think we should limit the transportation of infantry to May, and that the artillery and auxiliary troops should come in June! They should not arrive more than a month later than the infantry. Under what conditions would you employ the American infantry units?

Foch Dodges Final Decision.

Foch—A final decision cannot be made on that subject. That will evidently depend upon the degree of instruction of the units. In the crisis that actually confronts the allied armies it is effectives that we lack. The method of employing these units is a question to be handled in due course and according to their efficiency.

Pershing—I would like to have the conditions under which these units are to be employed determined now, and to fix the time during which the regiments and brigades will be used separately.

Foch—Make your proposition on that subject.

I then explained the details of the system that was being followed where our divisions were in training with the French and the plan agreed upon with the British. I added that it was fully understood that if an emergency should arise while our troops were in training they would go into battle as part of the divisions with which they were serving.

Pershing Refuses to Consent.

General Foch then said:

"I do not doubt the excellence of the method, but in the crisis through which we are passing I return to the decision of the supreme war council, and I ask you to transport during May, June and July only infantry and machine-gun units. Will you consent?"

Pershing—No, I do not consent. I propose for one month to ship nothing but infantry and machine-gun units, and after that the other arms and service of the rear troops to correspond.

Foch—If you adopt the plan I propose you would have by July 31, 300,000 more American infantry.

Pershing—You said just now that you would furnish the artillery, and even artillerymen, which would be joined with our infantry to complete our divisions. Then why not consent to transport our artillery personnel along with our infantry?

Foch—I repeat that it is the infantry of which we have the greatest need at this time. I would like to have General Bliss tell us the considerations which led to the decision taken by the supreme war council at Versailles.

Bliss—The collective note recommended to the United States to send only infantry until the surpeme war council should give instructions to the contrary. The government of the United States, in conformity with this note and with the recommendation of Secretary Baker, consented to—this plan. As far as the employment of the units on the front is concerned, the question should be decided by General Pershing according to agreement with the commander in chief to whose army they may be attached.

Foch Fears Disaster.

Pershing—I have been discussing this question of training our units for the last eight months, first with General Petain and then with Marshal Haig. The method agreed upon leads naturally to the formation of constituted American divisions.

General Foch said he wished to see American divisions constituted and an American army formed as large as possible, but the policy he was then advocating would have made it impossible to form an American army without serious delay, if ever. Continuing, he said:

"But do not forget that we are in the midst of a hard battle. If we do not take steps to prevent the disaster which is threatened at present the American army may arrive in France to find the British pushed into the sea and the French driven back behind the Loire, while it tries in vain to organize on lost battle fields over the graves of allied soldiers."

He was assured that it was fully understood that if an emergency should arise while our troops were in training with the British or French they would go into the battle and do their part. I then gave him the numbers to be shipped during May and told him that it had been agreed between the British and ourselves to consider the question for June later. I informed him that the British shipping authorities now thought it would be possible within the next three months to transport to France 750,000 men.

Our Troops Surprised.

With reference to the German attack at Seicheprey on the Twenty-sixth division the night of April 20-21, mentioned at the beginning of this chapter, that point was the focus of a German raid covering a three-kilometer front extending west from the Bois de Remieres. It came during a heavy fog and was a complete surprise to our troops, who were considerably outnumbered. Seicheprey was taken by the enemy, but co-operation was re-established throughout the division and the original front was recaptured on the following day.

In this affair we lost one officer, 80 enlisted men, killed; 11 officers, 176 enlisted men, wounded; 30 officers, 211 enlisted men, gassed, and five officers, 182 enlisted men, missing and prisoners.

The losses of the enemy in killed and wounded were reported as even greater.

Clanton Party Makes Fishing Trip To Gulf

caught the large shark. Though he was a younger member of the party, reports state that he handled his catch like a veteran. And after seeing the fish we are in no doubt that nerve and skill were required aplenty to land him.

The fishing was done in the mouth of St. Andrews Bay. It seems that the signs were just right when the boys got there, as every member of the party caught fish. Quite a number of Blue Fish were landed. According to reports Dick Kemp had quite a tussle with a Baby Dolphin. When the "baby" didn't act like a "baby" at all, and it was quite a surprise to find, on landing him that he was really a "baby" in size, but not in action.

The party returned home Sunday night and pronounced it a highly successful day of sport, packed full of activity for everyone.

Fishing Rodeo Opens Monday, August 17th

ond is for the greatest number of speckled trout caught in one day on shrimp and the twenty-third is for the largest catch of choice edible fish. All of these will doubtless be won by some "doodler" who sticks to the old pole, line and sinker method and spits on his bait for luck.

More than thirty prizes are offered in the different classes and there is nothing in the rules to prevent one fisherman from winning any number of these if he has the luck and skill to catch the fish, harpoon the devil fish and tell the big one to win the fish liar's contest; except that only children may enter the spadefish catching contest, in which a fine tackle box is the prize for the greatest number caught in a given hour at Ft. Gaines wharf.

At latest reports from Ft. Gaines, the cruise of the yacht, with her Mississippi owners and guests, captured all of the tarpon in the pre-rodeo contest which comes to a close Sunday afternoon, immediately before the big rodeo begins. Jake Rubel, of Corinth, certainly caught the first tarpon officially recorded; though he will have to be present to receive the award in that class at the wind-up, as will all other claimants of prizes under the rules; otherwise the prize goes to the next lucky man, or woman. Women are eligible for all prizes.

Though hundreds of ling and king mackerel had been caught since July 1, when the pre-rodeo event began, not one had been officially entered and weighed in with Weigher H. D. Bacon, at The Fort, up to August 8, when the latest official report was made. T. B. Baird, state manager of the Southern Bell, Birmingham; P. W. Greene, assistant treasurer of the same company, Atlanta; H. M. Stanfill, district manager, Mobile, and George A. Michael, Mobile banker, weighed in a number of blackfish, the largest weighing 15½ pounds and later caught larger blackfish and a ling, which they failed to record. In the two days aboard the Seahome they caught 9 blackfish, one ling and had a fierce fight with a devil fish which got away, taking with it Capt. Raz Crenshaw's harpoon and forty fathoms of new line.

MINERALS IN CATTLE FEEDING

By Dr. John M. Evvard

In the fattening of cattle it has been our experimental experience that the feeding of properly selected minerals has been a paying proposition.

The addition of from one-half to an ounce or more of minerals per head daily, the allowance depending upon the weight of the cattle and character of ration fed, resulted in a greater daily gain, a more uniform feeding record with less "off feed" disturbances, a better finish at the end of the fattening period, a greater selling value per hundred weight, and a larger margin per head fed this, over and above feed costs.

Surely these advantages accruing from the feeding of a well compounded mineral mixture carrying the elements most likely to be lacking in cattle feeding rations, or namely: calcium, phosphorus, iron, copper and iodine should appeal to even the hardest minded. After all, a great many so-called tough minded or conservative cattle feeders have in recent years tried out the "mineral way" of feeding, and a very large percentage of these farm experimenters have been won over to mineral feeding because of the good results secured.

In fact, considering all the phases of live stock production, the mineral feeders in cattle production are somewhat akin to the mineral feeders in swine raising, because both classes of feeders "stay put" that is, they "stay put with minerals in their feeding program." They have learned from the profitable experience that the feeding of properly selected minerals pays good dividends.

The meeting will start at 10 A. M. according to the County Agent. An interesting program has been planned so that the visitors will see and hear much that can be applied on their own farms. Farmers of this section are urged to bring their families and make a good half day of the meeting.

Saturday afternoon at 3:00 P. M., August 15, there will also be an estimating contest on the farm of Mr. A. F. Mims, Thorsby. A five-dollar gold piece will be offered as the prize for the successful guesser.

PAPER BAGS MADE FROM CHILTON COUNTY TIMBER

Did you know that there is being used right here in Clanton and Chilton County paper that is made from the trees that are cut from the swamps of our own county? Well, such is the case. No doubt you have sold some pine wood to the pulp manufacturers, or at least you have seen such wood being sold and hauled to market. This wood is being ground into pulp and manufactured into paper and sold on the markets as paper bags to our merchants and business men. No doubt you have carried home groceries in paper bags the pulp for which was grown on some old field in Chilton County.

These paper bags are manufactured by the Gulf States Paper Corporation at Tuscaloosa, and are distributed by the Taylor Wholesale Grocery Company of Clanton. This firm is the sole distributor for these bags in Central Alabama. They handle everything from charcoal bags to the large bags used by laundries to deliver dresses and things in.

The Gulf States Paper Corporation is owned and operated solely by Alabama capital and Alabama men. They use every bit of the raw material from this State that they can.

ANNUAL CAMP OF 4-H CLUB IS BIG SUCCESS

4-H Boys Of County Report Profitable And Enjoyable Camp On River

The 4-H Club Camp last week was a great success. More than a hundred boys attended camp and apparently enjoyed every minute of the time, except when they had to shell peas and clean chickens.

The selection of the best all-round camper is an annual affair with the boys. James Dennis of the Calf Club was voted best camper, and Dick Davis of Concord Club was voted second best camper. James Deason of the Isabella Club was camp secretary and rendered splendid service. Claud Conway, formerly of Isabella, Mr. Earle Thomas, vocational teacher of Isabella, and Mr. J. P. Montgomery, vocational teacher of Jemison, aided Mr. Stapp in helping the boys make the camp the success it was.

Among those who visited the boys while on camp and made talks to them were Mrs. J. Q. Wade, Mrs. S. J. Ezell, Mr. J. B. Atkinson, Rev. G. G. Williams, County Supt. of Education B. Lawrence and Mr. W. M. Polk. Mr. Stapp and the boys certainly appreciate the way the members of the Kiwanis Club, Mr. Rudolph Moates, Mr. J. N. Dennis, Mrs. Arthur Johnson, Mr. Lorenza Popwell, Mr. Bob Sumner and others cooperated in helping get the boys and their baggage to and from camp. They also wish to express their appreciation to the Alabama Power Company men at Lay Dam for showing them through the plant there.

HIGH SCHOOL TO OPEN HERE SEPTEMBER 7

Boys And Girls Urged To Continue In School If Possible

On Monday, September 7, Chilton County High School will throw open its doors to the young men and women of Clanton and Chilton county.

Today there are scores of boys and girls standing at the cross roads of life and don't know it. They will make a decision at this time, and their lives to the last day they live will be influenced by the choice they make.

By this statement I mean that schools and colleges will open all over this Southland and our boys and girls are undecided as to whether they will continue their education —undecided, some of them, as to whether it is worthwhile. To this group I would say, "go back to school if it is possible for you to do so." Education is the best insurance that the world has to offer as protection against failure and disappointment.

Out of the 100 boys and girls in the United States who start into the first grade only 67 ever finish the common schools. 33 of the 100 that started enter the high school and 14 finish. Only 4 enter college and 2 graduate. Those who finish their education generally speaking, are well paid for doing so. Figures based upon the earnings of thousands of people show that the man with only a common school training may expect to earn in his life $45,000; the high school graduate can

Victor Hanson Cup Awarded To Greenville Advocate This Year

The annual institute of the Alabama Press Association met in regular session at Auburn last week for a successful meeting. Jack M. Pratt, editor of The Pickens County Herald, was selected as president of the Association for the coming year. He succeeds Marcy B. Darnall, editor of The Florence Herald.

Other officers chosen were F. G. Stephens, vice-president; E. C. Hall, of Alexander City, secretary and treasurer; J. C. Norwood, Cullman, historian and Mrs. Scottie McKenzie Fraser, Dothan, poetess.

The winners of the All Alabama Weekly Newspaper Eleven of 1931 were announced as follows: The Greenville Advocate, the Roanoke Leader, Southern Star, Ozark, The Florence Herald, The Covington News, Andalusia, The Dothan Herald, The Chilton County News, The Sylacauga News, The Atmore Advance, The Brewton Standard, The Jasper Mountain Eagle and The Dothan Wiregrass Journal

The Victor Hanson Cup for the best all-round newspaper in Alabama this year was awarded to the Greenville Advocate, published at Greenville by Gen. James B. Stanley and his two sons. The Advocate was founded in 1865 and Gen. Stanley is one of the oldest editors in point of service, in America, having served continuously sixty-six years. A pleasing feature of the award was that it was made at almost the same time as Gen. Stanley's birthday.

In making the decision which awarded the Victor Hanson cup The Jasper Mountain Eagle, The Ozark Southern Star, Florence Herald, and the Chilton County News, were not considered due to the fact that they had received this award in former years. Judges in this contest were Howard C. Smith, P. O. Davis, Fred Naeter and George Naeter.

Members of the "Ala-Pressa" committee, publishers of the official organ of the association, were reelected and includes F. W. Stanley, Greenville, M. C. Cady, Birmingham, and P. O. Davis, Auburn.

Due to illness, Billy Smith, editor and publisher of the Chilton County News, was unable to attend the institute this year.

CHAPTER XXXVIII

The question of the shipment of American troops, and particularly their allotment to the allied armies, had assumed very great importance in the minds of the allied leaders.

Accordingly a session of the supreme war council was called at Abbeville May 1, 1918, and Premier Clemenceau opened the meeting by referring forthwith to the previous recommendation of the council's military representatives as to the disposition of American troops.

"The military representatives," he began, "expressed the opinion in their joint note No. 18 that only infantry and machine-gun units should be sent to France for the present. Since then the agreement between Lord Milner and General Pershing, signed at London April 24, 1918, has intervened. This agreement makes a change.

"It had been understood at Versailles that America would send 120,000 men per month, which the French and English armies would share equally. Under the Milner-Pershing agreement it appears none go to France. The French have not been consulted. We might suppose that in compensation the American troops arriving in June would be given to France. But it now appears they are also to join the British. I wish to protest that this is not satisfactory.

"I am not discussing the figure of 120,000 men; I am prepared to accept that these men go to the British in May. I am asking to receive the same number of troops in June. There are close to 400,000 Americans in France at present, but only five divisions, or about 125,000 men, can be considered as combatants. That is not a satisfactory proportion."

Milner Defends Agreement.

Lord Milner arose, much incensed at M. Clemenceau's statement, which he considered quite unjust.

"M. Clemenceau has intimated," he asserted, "that there was something mysterious about the London agreement. I believe that an explanation is necessary. He appears to believe that the agreement we signed is a reversal of the supreme war council's decision. I know only of a joint note embodying the recommendations of the military representatives, but it is of no value without the approval of the governments.

"Besides, M. Clemenceau seems to be under the impression that half of the American troops were to go to France and the other half to England. I do not recollect any such decision. All that General Pershing and I have urged is that infantry and machine gunners should be sent to France. We had no intention of depriving France of any American troops. I do not know that anything has been said regarding their allotment on arrival in France. We simply wanted to hasten their coming."

Pershing Upholds Independence.

"In making the agreement with Lord Milner," I interposed, "I had in mind bringing troops as rapidly as possible to meet the existing situation. Lord Milner is quite correct in stating that there was no agreement as to the allocation of American troops either to the British or French armies. There is no agreement between my government and anybody else that a single American soldier shall be sent to either the British or French.

"There is in existence an agreement between Mr. Lloyd George and myself that six divisions should be brought to France. M. Clemenceau will remember that I spoke to him about going to London to arrange for the shipment of American troops to France and that he approved because it would expedite their arrival. I also spoke to General Petain about it."

Clemenceau Is Insistent.

M. Clemenceau remembered my speaking of it, but disregarding his previous approval continued his objections, saying:

"We have been informed that nothing had been decided on at Versailles, but something has been decided on at London, and France was closely concerned in this. It was decided that six divisions should go to the British. Well, I will not argue about that. You announce to us artillery for the month of June.

"Where four are in alliance, two of them cannot act independently. Nothing has been provided for France in June.

"The appointment of General Foch as commander in chief is not a mere decoration. This post involves grave responsibilities; he must meet the present situation; he must provide for the future.

"I accept what has been done for May, but I want to know what is intended for June."

M. Clemenceau said the French had not received certain specialists they had asked for, and also quoted from the conversation I had held with General Foch with reference to sending over troops in May and June.

British Losses Heavy.

Mr. Lloyd George then said:

"I am of M. Clemenceau's opinion. The interests of the allies are identical; we must not lose sight of that, otherwise the unity of command has no meaning. We must consider what is best for the common cause.

"What is the situation today? The British army has had heavy fighting and has suffered heavy losses. All available drafts have been sent to France and we shall send all who are available in May and June. This would be the case even if all the Americans who arrive in Europe during these months should be assigned to the British army.

"At present certain British divisions have been so severely handled that they cannot be reconstituted. General Foch will remember the number."

"Yes, ten," Foch answered.

"As we cannot again put them in line," Mr. Lloyd George continued, "they must be replaced by new units. The Germans are now fighting with the object of using up our effectives. If they can do this without exhausting their own reserves they will sometime deal us a blow which we shall not be able to parry.

"In the meantime, I suggest that the decision for the allotment of the American troops for June be taken up when that month arrives. In May, in fact, either of our two armies may be hard pressed. That is the one which should be re-enforced. It is not desirable now to decide how troops arriving in June should be allotted."

Foch Also Cites France's Need.

To this, Foch replied:

"It is undeniable that the British army is now exhausted; so let it receive immediately re-enforcement in May. But lately the French have had grave losses, notably at Montdidier, and both during the last few days have been fighting shoulder to shoulder. So American aid is now needed almost as much for France as for Great Britain. Above this question of aid to the French or to the British is aid to the allies.

"We are agreed that the American army is to re-enforce the British army at once; in June we, too, shall need infantry and machine-gun units. So let us make the agreement for June at once by saying: the same shipment of infantry and machine guns as for May. If there is tonnage available we shall devote it, after that, to the elements necessary for filling up the American divisions. I am sure that General Pershing, with his generosity and his breadth of view, will grant the fairness of this view and will extend for June the agreement decided upon for May."

Whereupon Mr. Lloyd George gave support to the principle, saying that British recruits would not be available until August and he understood it was the same for France, when both would be able to furnish their own recruits. He then asked that the May program be extended over June, in which M. Clemenceau joined.

Pershing Insists on Own Army.

In reply, I said:

"I do not suppose that we are to understand that the American army is to be entirely at the disposal of the French and British commands."

M. Clemenceau said that of course this was not the intention.

Continuing, I said:

"Speaking for my government and myself, I must insist upon our intention to have our own army. The principle of unity of command must prevail in our army. It must be complete under its own command. I should like to have a date fixed when this will be realized. I should like to make it clear that all American troops are not to be with the British, as there are five divisions with the French now and there will be two more in a short time.

"As to the extension of the May agreement to June I am not prepared to accept it. The troops arriving in June will not be available for the front before the end of July or the middle of August. So we have the whole month of May ahead before deciding whether an emergency is likely to arise in June. I have explained to Lord Milner and General Foch why I do not wish to commit the American army so long in advance. If need be, I shall recommend the extension into June. I can see no reason for it now."

CHAPTER XXXIX

"I am commander in chief of the allied armies in France," said General Foch, "and my appointment has been sanctioned by the signature not only of the British and French governments but also by the President of the United States. Hence, I believe myself in a position to insist.

"There is a program signed by Lord Milner and General Pershing at London. I ask to be made a party to this arrangement, since America has given me the strategic direction of the war, or else I have no reason for holding the position.

"So I ask that an agreement be made this evening among Lord Milner, General Pershing and myself, extending to June what has been decided on for May.

"I cannot forget the responsibilities weighing on me, because of the fact that the allied governments have intrusted to me the direction of operations in France."

Of course all present knew that no authority to dictate regarding such matters had been conferred upon him and his remarks only showed that the allies were ready to go to almost any length to carry their point.

Clemenceau Makes Plea.

Premier Clemenceau then said he agreed with General Foch and favored an American army, but that the Germans were at Villers-Bretonneux, and if the lines were broken there the enemy might quickly arrive under the walls of Paris, and liaison between the allied armies might have to be established on the Loire, or if the lines were pierced at Hazebrouck the enemy could reach the sea.

"What is important for the morale of our soldiers," he said, "is not to tell them that the American soldiers are arriving but to show them that they have arrived."

In my opinion the plan proposed was entirely unsound, and I thought that the best and quickest way to help the allies would be to build up an American army. Moreover, the implied presumption that the council might dictate to us either as a council or through the allied commander in chief in the arbitrary manner indicated set me more firmly than ever against American units serving in allied armies. The day's discussion made it quite clear that both allies intended to get commitment to the proposed schedule as far into the future as possible.

Saw Pershing Opposing Wilson.

A telegram sent by the British secretary of state for foreign affairs April 8, 1918, to Lord Reading, British ambassador at Washington, said:

"It is evident from the brief account of the conversation that General Pershing's views are absolutely inconsistent with the broad policy which we believe the President has accepted. The main difference, of course, is that we interpret it as meaning that 480,000 infantry and machine guns are to be brigaded with French and British troops in the course of four months. General Pershing admits no such obligation and does not conceal the fact that he disapproves of the policy.

"A second and minor difference is that, while the British government quite agrees as to the propriety of ultimately withdrawing American troops brigaded with the French and British so as to form an American army, they do not think this process could or ought to be attempted until the end of the season for active operations this year draws to its close, say, in October or November.

"I am unwilling to embarrass the President, who has shown such a firm grasp of the situation, with criticisms of his officers. But the difference of opinion is so fundamental and touches so nearly the issues of the whole war that we are boud to have the matter cleared up."

West End People and Things

A spic and span new garage has been erected in our suburban city and you did not say a word about it. Mr. Grady Taylor is proprietor and Albert Pyron is head knocker. If you car gets rankerous slip it in that shop and Albert will have it coming out in just a few minutes ready to carry you and your flapper to the shady roadside. You know where it is.

As stated in your paper last week, the new store of Mr. Cooper threw open its doors Saturday and displayed a dandy and well selected stock of general merchandise. Call on him there and his prices will hold you fast and empty your pocketbook before you can resist the bargains he will offer you.

The kindest and best people live in West End that are. We challenge the world has none better.

Mr. O. O. Roper has sold 700 dozen roasting ears this year. On top of a $2,000 clear on a strawberry crop, with more good things to follow, that don't sound like he is going to get hungry this winter. At least, not much. There was only one stalk of cotton on his farm this year and he happened to walk up on that one the other day and pulled it up rott and branch.

Mallie White, or perhaps, his excellent wife, are having a complete and beautiful job of painting and decorating done at their lovely home out this way. Mr. Posey Marcus and his efficient crew are handling the job and you know that means it will be nifty and nice when they finish. What a pity that more of our citizens who are able don't do likewise.

Mr. Jim Scroggins, who is widely known as a stock and cattle man, is having erected a large new barn to care for his mules and horses this fall. If you need anything in the horse, mule cattle or hog line just call on him a little later and he will fit you up.

The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Dunlap has been quite sick for a few days, but is pronounced better now.

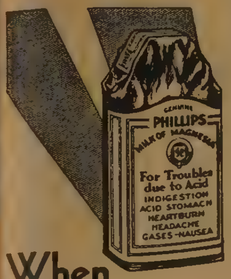
Mrs. Luther Williams and two small sons, who recently moved from here to Selma, visited his father and mother and other relatives here last week end.

Mrs. Lullard Robinson and three children of Birmingham, are the guests of her uncle, Mr. Joe Grooms, and wife.

Leon Richardson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, of West End, is quite sick with typhoid fever. Dr. Napoleon Johnson is the attending physician.

Mrs. Minnie Goff has been wrestling with typhoid pneumonia for several weeks. I learn she is now nicely convalescing.

Mrs. Beatrice Jackson of Savannah, Ga., has returned home from a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Joe Grooms.



When PAIN Comes

WHAT many people call indigestion very often means excess acid in the stomach. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated, and food sours. The corrective is an alkali, which quickly neutralizes acids. And the best alkali known to medical science is Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this harmless, tasteless alkali neutralizes instantly many times as much harmful acid, and then the symptoms disappear at once. You will never use crude methods when once you learn the efficiency of this. Go get a small bottle to try.

Get the genuine Phillips Milk of Magnesia, the kind physicians have prescribed for 50 years in correcting excess acids. 25c and 50c a bottle—any drugstore.

ALABAMA HAS LOW STATEWIDE DOMESTIC RATE FOR ELECTRICITY

Reports Legislative Investigating Committee on Public Utilities In Alabama

"IN THIS investigation the thing which is of most interest to consumer is the cost to him of electric current per kilowatt hour. Under the rates of Alabama Power Company as last revised by the Public Service Commission the average cost to the domestic consumer during the year 1930 was 5.05c against 7.75c per kilowatt hour during the year 1926, or a reduction of 34.8% in that period of time, and is 17% less than the national average . . . . . and is the lowest statewide domestic rate in the United States."

"Upon the whole it is very clear to your Committee that power is available to new industries in Alabama in rates which compare very favorably with those of other States. We realize that a strict comparison of rates is impossible because of varying conditions in different localities but from the evidence before us it appears that the Alabama consumer is enjoying rates which when considered all together are lower than the general average throughout this section of the country."

"We find that the rates which the utilities collect for their services are prescribed by the Alabama Public Service Commission and it is undisputed that this Commission has given careful attention and consideration to these matters, the fact being that there has been a reduction in rates for the consumers in Alabama of more than $1,000,000 within the past two and one-half years."—From Report of Legislative Committee under H. J. R. No. 80—1931 Session.

WINTER LEGUMES IN THE SOUTH

The use of winter legumes for green manure in the Cotton Belt has increased greatly in recent years, says the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Austrian winter peas, hairy vetch, and smooth vetch are the crops most generally used. Make seeding the latter part of September or early October, as earlier seeding may result in nematode injury and later ones in poor stands and growth. The legumes should be inoculated at seeding time. Use a commercial fertilizer consisting largely of superphosphate, especially when growing a legume on land for the first time. Barnyard manure also increases the growth and helps to inoculate the plants. Turn under the green-manure crops two weeks before corn-planting time and three weeks before cotton planting.

Congratulations to The Greenville Advocate and Gen. J. B. Stanley

Sixty-six years ago, a young man, just out of the service of the South in the War Between the States, founded a paper, the Greenville Advocate, at Greenville, Alabama. Last week at the annual convention of Alabama Press Association, this paper and this man were presented with an outstanding honor—that of being awarded the Victor H. Hanson cup, which goes each year to the best all-around Alabama weekly newspaper during the year. It is gratifying indeed to see this gallant gentleman of the Old South and his newspaper receive this token of recognition. With a record of service such as lies behind the Advocate, it is assured that the applause of fellow laborers in the newspaper game, will be loud and long. With a glad hand we extend our heartiest congratulations to the Advocate, Gen. Stanley and to his two most worthy sons, J. G. and F. W. Stanley, who share with their father the credit for making the paper the force for better things that it is.

This beautiful cup is given through the courtesy of Victor H. Hanson, of The Birmingham News, and it is awarded to the paper which is adjudged to have been of the most service during the year. But it occurs to us that this token of honor, given by Victor Hanson through the decision of Alabama Press, must have a fuller significance than that of one year's service to Gen. Stanley who has served his people with his newspaper sixty-six years. And, not only has his influence been felt in his community, but the entire state has been helped because of his constructive and progressive ideals which have led him on to the time when he is the oldest—the dean of Alabama and American editors, with the love and respect of his fellow laborers. We think that this must also be a recognition of some of those other years, perhaps when the Advocate was yet a babe in years, when political, social and economic conditions were upset, lean years, and years of depression and panic—these things Gen. Stanley and the Advocate have gone through. Sometimes we suspect it was hard to see the outcome, and like Columbus, he could only say, "Sail on!" A long journey has been made and an honor well-earned has been bestowed. The few words we can say are but passing, but sixty-six years of earnest and sincere work will exert a lasting influence. May Gen. Stanley be with us yet, for a long, long time, we say, as we add our approval and congratulations.

Explanations and Apologies

It is a new experience for the electorate of the United States to have the President in the midst of his term telling them in effect what a good Executive he has been. It has been the custom heretofore for the Chief Executive to let his aots speak for themselves, at least until he had been renominated and the actual campaign was on.

The assumption of the party in power has always been that its high officials were competent, and that the nation in its wisdom must appreciate the deftness and skill of the administration. When the time came for speeches, the accomplishments of the administration and the benefits that had accrued to the country from the President's exercise of the functions of the high office were naturally the theme of the dominant party's orators.

It is all different this time. The deduction must be made from the output of the publicity branch of the Republican National Committee in that so far from applauding the President, the country is most doubtful of his capacity and increasingly critical of his performances. No other conclusion is possible in view of the constant stream of apology and explanation. This is particularly significant inasmuch as it is popularly understood in Washington that the President, with his meticulous attention to details, supervises and O K's the entire output of his press agents.

A recent publication emanating from the Committee carried an elaborate dissertation on the inaccuracy of the assumption that the President was a miracle worker in the direction of insuring prosperity. This, of course, though it departed radically from all the campaign propaganda precedent to his election, was intended to palliate the difference between his promises and what actually eventuated in the fields of industry and commerce, especially with reference to the incongruity of his campaign declaration that his election meant that everybody should have a good job and the six or seven million people now without employment.

More recently we have a White House statement telling of the marvelous achievements of the administration in the National Building Program and Secretary of Labor Doak's report on the re-employment of 281,000 men for which he gives the Hoover regime credit. It is stated that $44,000,0000 worth of projects are in the course of contract letting and the plans are under way for $181,000,000 more, and reference is made to something like $50,000,000 worth of projects that are under way but have not quite reached the stage of contract letting. The obvious question is raised why it should have taken upwards of a year and a half to have reached these plans which were to furnish immediate relief for the unemployment situation. Senator Fletcher of Florida recently complained of the delay in the government's building program. Fletcher particularly instanced projects in his own state to illustrate his point, among them the post office building at Lake City, the appropriation for which was made in 1930. The work was not begun until a year later. He also cited the Jacksonville Parcel Post Building, the appropriation for which was made in March of 1930, but on which work has not been begun yet. Lest it be thought that Fletcher's strictures had a partisan bias, it may be noted that Senator Bingham of Connecticut, rock-bound Republican regular, was equally vehement in his criticisms of the government's delay.

In the matter of finding places for the unemployed it is probable that the 281,000 jobs which the administration claims to have filled, would have been filled a good deal sooner had the President not vetoed the Wagner Employment bills in order that none of the credit of supplying men with work might be alienated from the Republicans.

The instances could be multiplied indefinitely to show the extraordinary appeal that is being put forward to excuse the President. It is a curious political departure and the significance that President Hoover feels it is necessary at this time to go to such length to appease dissatisfaction with his administration is perhaps the leading political index of the day.

"ROUND TOWN"

---by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

We almost started this column off with a poem about autumn. A poem about the turning trees, the waving grain, the flocks of geese flying south and the yellow golden rod. The poem was already copied down and ready to be turned in when we realized that autumn is a long way off yet. This is only the middle of August and we have some of the hottest summer weather to pass through yet this year. Nevertheless some of the cool nights we have been having during the past week almost made us think that fall was really here.

If you noticed the article on the front page of the News this week concerning the negro contribution to the reward fund for the capture of the negro attacker of three white girls in Birmingham not long ago you will see that the names of a number of the most prominent negroes around Clanton are affixed to the letter accompanying the contribution. The fact that these negroes from Clanton raised this sum and sent it to Birmingham to swell the reward fund seems evidence to us that the intelligent negro as well as the intelligent white person is anxious to avoid trouble or friction between the two races. We think that this act on the part of these Clanton negroes was very well timed and will help to disspell any fear around Clanton that trouble was contemplated.

* * * *

By the time you read this piece I may be all wrong. Nevertheless I would like to call your attention to the fact that the fire alarm has not been blown, except in practice, for the entire summer. If I remember correctly it was away back in the spring when we had our last fire. Clanton has certainly improved over last summer. For a while during the summer of 1930 the fire truck was making a call a day and one could hardly sleep for the blowing of the fire alarm. Perhaps Clanton has learned to discipline herself a little better in the use of matches and fires.

* * * *

Notice this week that the city clerk is taking his vacation and that G. C. Armstrong, manager of the local A & P Store is doing the same. Wonder what would happen if I asked the boss for a vacation. Perhaps ye columnist would get a permanent rest and Clanton would have to do without this column for a while.

* * * *

August is already passed the half way mark and September will soon be here. September will bring school days again much to the displeasure of the little boys and girls of Clanton. I sympathize with them for once this writer was a kid himself and remembers how he hated for school to start.

* * * *

With school starting soon there should be a general influx of school teachers into town pretty soon. We welcome them back to Clanton after their vacation during the summer months.

How is the golf course coming along? Haven't heard as much about it lately as I did at first. Will the first divot digger who makes a hole in one please drop around to the News office. We want to see what he looks like.

For the benefit of Clanton's budding young Bobbies we repeat here a story heard not so long ago. If you have heard this one stop me. There was a certain dub who was playing a round of golf. He gave the ball a terriffic blow and by a miracle his ball landed in the cup for a hole in one. When ye dud had sufficiently recovered from the shock he prepared to play the next hole. He hit the ball on the second drive as hard as he hit the first and by a lucky fluke the ball made a second hole in one. Wiping his head with his handkerchief the dub whispered, "Gosh, I thought I missed that one." Hope you liked the little story and can find a moral in it for yourself.

Clanton has a new business. Spigeners, a firm of morticians from Tuscaloosa, have established themselves in the place formerly occupied by the Hugh Jones mercantile company.

* * * *

A number of Clanton fishermen have gone to Mobile this year to attend the annual fishing rodeo. We hope they land the biggest fish and get the prizes. They get the prizes and we get the fish stories.

* * * *

Had you noticed what a change the new coat of paint which has recently been put on the Hill Grocery Company has made? It has given the building a nice new clean energetic look. Any store with an attractive front will draw in more business than its neighbor with a dismal exterior.

* * * *

The surplus cotton must be disposed of, the unemployment situation must be met, the wheat surplus must be gotten rid of; a thousand and one things are facing this columnist so he must stop to do his bit toward setting things right again, though he confesses that his advice in solving such weighty matters counts for less than nil.

Jemison Farm News

By Dept of Vocational Agriculture Jemison High School

Everybody is canning and drying fruits in this section. Mr. Jim Cobb says the only disadvantage to it is that it keeps him broke buying fruit jars. Mr. L. H. Bean has as their goal 365 jars, one quart a day for each day in the year.

The farmers want to write Auburn and find out what is the best type of plow to use in plowing up the third row of cotton. Another farm problem to be solved.

The farm poultry in this section is feeling the effects of these "prosperous times." They were brought up on good growing mashes all analyzed and labeled. They are now being handed out such plain foods as corn meal and buttermilk with plenty of watermelons as a filler. The old hens look around as if to say that times are not what they used to be. However, cornmeal and buttermilk with plenty of green feed has in it the making of a fairly good ration.

The land owners in this section are interested in planting vetch. Those who have tenant farmers are also interested and will plant vetch if they can decide, before it is too late to plant, the problem of what part should the landlord and tenant furnish.

If anyone thinks that this hill land won't produce corn they ought to visit the seventy acres of Mr. Clarence Childress, and become convinced that it will produce corn. Mr. Childress thinks the method of cultivation has a good deal to do with it. However, most of his land has had vetch or barnyard manure at some time during the past late years.

The farmers around Thorsby are especially interested in shipping Big Stem Jersey sweet potatoes. If the vine growth indicates the yield there will be several carloads sold. Mr. Tom Martin of Thorsby finds two No. 1 potatoes under each hill that he has tried. That indicates a very good yield for this time of the year.

Smith Makes Statement About Financial Condition of Town

Report Given In Answer To Questions Asked; Audit Of Town's Financial Condition of October 6, 1930 Is Also Published

Clanton, Ala., Aug. 18, 1931.

Editor Union-Banner, Clanton, Ala.
Dear Sir:

There appeared in the columns of your paper of Thursday, August 13, 1931, under your article "The Man On the Corner" certain statements or rather questions concerning the financial status of the Town of Clanton, and certain statements regarding operation of the water works of the Town.

In the first place, the Mayor and Council heartily agree with your statement that the affairs of the Town of Clanton are public matters, which are a part of the business of every citizen of the Town and we appreciate the cooperation of the citizens and would like to state that all of the affairs of the Town are public matters and all public records of the Town and its actions are always open to the public for their inspection. The present administration of the Town of Clanton took office on October 6, 1930, and have been in office something like ten and one-half months and in this connection we would like to remind the citizens that the present depression has been on us and that no doubt the Town has been, during the present administration, going through its worst financial depression, this is true of practically all other businesses, both public and private.

There is submitted below a statement of the financial condition of the Town of Clanton as of October 6, 1930, the date the present officials took office. This audit was made by H. C. Crane & Co., certified public accountants of Montgomery, Alabama, and was made in compliance with the law which requires an audit each year:

It might be stated that there were other indebtedness of the Town, which were not shown by said audit for the reason that there was no record of the same.

We would like to call your attention to the fact when the present administration went into office there was $4.13 cash on hand in the General Fund and was a General Fund overdraft of $421.29, leaving General Fund actually overdrawn $417.16, that is, the Town was in the hole that amount in the General Fund on October 6, 1930.

The first question asked in your Article was the indebtedness of the Town on the water works plant. This indebtedness is $25,000.00 bond indebtedness and $1800.00 on the filtering plant, both the water works and the filtering plant were purchased and provided for during former administrations.

The next question asked was the total bond indebtedness of the Town, which is as follows:

Street Improvements	$32,000.00
Water works (as stated above)	25,000.00
Schools	8,000.00
Total Bond Indebtedness	$65,000.00

The next question asked was the total monthly expense of the Town, which is as follows:

Salaries, including Mayor, Clerk, Supt. of Water Works, Supt. of Streets, Helper on Street, Day and Night Policeman, and Street Cleaner, $535.00; General Securities Corporation, on filtering plant, $200.00; Alabama Power Company for street lights, operating water works, and fire engine, approximately, $285.00. There are numerous miscellaneous items, such as necessary office supplies, extra help that the Town employs, lime for the filtering plant, accessories and parts for water works, gas and oil for truck and engine and water departments and necessary parts and repairs for tractors and graders and trucks and other machinery of the Town, approximately, $300.00, making a total of $1320.00. (Interest on past due indebtedness not included).

There is another question that was not asked in your column, but we think the citizens should have a right to know, which is Receipts of the Town from all sources. In this connection there are certain receipts as license and taxes which come only a few months of the year, but below we are setting out the yearly receipts and then the monthly average of the total Receipts:

Ad Valorem Taxes	$ 7,000.00
License	6,500.00
Fines and Cost	500.00
Water Works	12,000.00
Miscellaneous, such as rental equipment and other items	300.00
Total	$26,300.00

The above figures are the average receipts yearly of the Town of Clanton and it will be observed the monthly receipts of the Town are between $2100.00 and $2200.00. It might be stated that the receipts of the Town during the last ten months was some $2000.00 or $3000.00 more for the reason that $2082.03 was collected by the Town on one of the official bonds and the Town has also collected some several hundred dollars for some past due obligations.

Since October 6, 1930, in round numbers, about $14,000.00 has been paid upon past due open accounts and waived notes indebtedness. These payments have been for various and sundry items, among the same, being $1500.00 on the fire truck, around $1200.00 to the Alabama Power Co. for light bills which were past due, Farmers Hardware Company, around $400.00 on past due account, Eureka Fire Hose Company, around $700.00, past due salaries around $1100.00, past due notes to the General Security Corporation for filtering plant, $800.00, interest coupons on water work bond $1250.00, Standard Oil Company, past due indebtedness $300.00, L. C. Warr $200.00, and many more items which the records of the Town will show and all of this being accounts that were past due, or for interest that became due upon past indebtedness at the time the present administration went into office. In other words, since October 6, 1930, something over $14,000.00 has been paid on past due indebtedness of the Town of Clanton. In this connection we would like also to state that all current bills, created by the present administration have been paid and satisfied and there are some bills created by former administrations which have not been paid, but which we are paying off as fast as possible. The $14,000.00 which has been paid in round numbers, has been prorated out among the several creditors of the Town. The Town now pays its monthly current bills and is in a position to pay cash for all necessary purchases and obligations assumed by the Town.

All of the bonded indebtedness shown above and the indebtedness of the filtering plant and other debts mentioned above were created prior to the present administration assuming office and we have tried not to create any new debts, or to expend any sums of money except, of course, as is necessary to properly carry on the functions of the Town.

We would like to state further in regards to the water works and the rates which are now being charged, that this administration is using exactly the same rate used by the former administrations when the filtering plant was purchased, as it was estimated that it would be necessary to charge this rate in order to pay off the indebtedness of the filtering plant and the operation of the water works. We would like to call attention of the citizens to the fact, as stated above, that there is now $1800.00 due on the filtering plant and this is being paid for at the rate of $200.00 per month, the last past due note being paid August 15th and the final note will become due in April, 1932, at which time the filtering plant will be finally paid for, and it is the purpose to materially reduce the water rate about January 1st, 1932. The Town appreciates the fact that the present rate is high, but in view of the purchase of this filtering plant and the great improvement in the water being furnished and in view of the fact that only a few more months, the rates can be reduced, we feel that the citizens should bear with us during this time. As stated in the beginning of this letter, conditions are depressing and we heartily feel that expenses of operating the Town should be reduced wherever possible and we are glad to say that the Town is on a cash basis and that the credit of the Town is good and as stated we hope to, in the very near future, materially reduce the water rate.

Mr. Editor, we have tried to answer in this letter, each of the questions asked by you and we are glad of this opportunity to give the public information as to the financial conditions of the Town and we might state that the yearly audit of the Town affairs will be made in October of this year and we will be glad to have this printed in both the County papers. In conclusion, the business of the Town is the business of every single citizen and tax payer and we want each of you to feel free at any time to advise or suggest or help in any way that you might see fit, the officials in the operation of our Town.

Yours very truly,
J. LEE SMITH, Mayor.
Attest: C. H. PIPES, Clerk.

LIVE-AT-HOME GOAL IS BEING ATTAINED

Auburn, Ala. —The live-at-home movement which has been promoted with unusual success in Alabama to date this year will be continued through the fall and winter. With this in view, summer and fall garden work is now in progress, as reported by the county farm and home demonstration agents.

Plantings are being made, cultivation is being continued, and additional fertilizer is being applied. The aim is to make the garden render maximum service in supplying food for the family.

Fall vegetables listed by Julian Brown, extension horticulturist of the Extension Service of the Alabama Polytecnic Institute, are tomatoes, beans, turnips, parsnips, beets, lettuce, Swiss chard, rutabagas, cabbage, Chinese cabbage, spinach, mustard, onions, and other vegetables.

"The main things to do," said Mr. Brown, "are to keep planting, working, and fertilizing. When the weather is hot there is an inclination to neglect the garden. This is a mistake because a few hours spent in garden work at frequent intervals will keep it producing throughout the year."

Outside of tne garden farmers are producing and preparing to produce feed for animals. Rape, Austrian peas, and hairy vetch will be planted in the early fall. Most of the Austrian pea and hairy vetch plantings will be for soil improvement but many farmers will plant them for grazing and for hay. Where this is done either of these winter legumes and oats will be planted together.

LOOKING FOR THINGS

Did you ever stop to think how much time we waste every day looking for things which have been mislaid? We misplace a letter or document and spend half an hour looking for it. Often several minutes are consumed in searching for a hat or pair of spectacles. Some froquently forget where they have parked the car.

This waste of time through lack of care in putting things in their proper places was called to our attention by a very timely article in a newspaper which has just come to our desk. It is such a fine article, so full of good common sense and practical advice, that we shall clip it out for our scrapbook at once.

Now where in the dickens did we put those scissors?

Learn what a difference six cylinders make

Step out of any other low-priced car into a Chevrolet, and learn the difference six cylinders make.

"Idle" the engine—and the whole car remains steady. Open the throttle—the power flows evenly. Accelerate—throttle down—go fifteen or fifty—and this smoothness stays with you whatever you do. It's actually built into the motor—and objectionable vibration never even starts!

Yet smoothness is only one of many six-cylinder advantages. There's greater quietness, because noisy vibration is gone. There's greater comfort, because built-in smoothness doesn't tire you out. There's greater flexibility, because the power-impulses of a six overlap. And a six is much easier to handle!

If you raise the hood of a Chevrolet and watch the engine running so smoothly, you'll realize that six cylinders also mean greater dependability.

And remember when you do—that no other car is so economical to operate as the Chevrolet Six.

Clanton Methodist Church

D. W. Haskew, Pastor

Our church is neat, cool and attractive and our services are short, spicy and full of the Spirit. We have no broadcasting station in our auditorium, and so we are asking that you occupy one of our pews, and enjoy our services.

Next Sunday the pastor will preach at both hours, 11 A. M. and 8 P. M. It is the policy of this pastor not to get after the folks who attend church about church attendance, but to be eternally after those who do not go. Some of you who read this will have your conscience to condemn you because you know that you are one who is indifferent about going to church. Why not play fair with your soul and fair with God and fill your place in God's temple?

For three Sundays our Sunday school has been growing. If you will give to us your presence we will continue to grow.

American consumers of meat are demanding pork products with more lean in proportion to fat than formerly. The present demand is for a hog with a slaughter weight of about 200 pounds, rather long, fairly deep, fairly well finished, and with a good proportion of lean meat.

Winter killing causes nearly as heavy losses to the winter wheat crop as all wheat diseases combined. Using hardy varities, sowing in stubble or cornstalks, preparing a firm seed-bed on fallowed land by means of a duck-foot cultivator, sowing with furrow drills at proper rates and dates, and mulching with straw, reduce winter injury of wheat.

3 RULES
big help to BOWELS

What a joy to have the bowels move like clockwork, every day! It's easy, if you mind these simple rules of a famous old doctor:

1. Drink a big tumblerful of water before breakfast, and several times a day.
2. Get plenty of outdoor exercise without unduly fatiguing yourself.
3. Try for a bowel movement at exactly the same hour every day.

Everyone's bowels need help at times, but the thing to use is Dr. Caldwells' Syrup Pepsin. You'll get a thorough cleaning-out, and it won't leave your insides weak and watery. This family doctor's prescription is just fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin, and other helpful ingredients that couldn't hurt a child. But how it wakes up those lazy bowels! How good you feel with your system rid of all that poisonous waste matter.

A GOSPEL FOR ALL MEN

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D.D.

Here is a lesson with an unsual amount of action. The Bible is far from being a dull book. To test this read from Acts 10:1 to 11:25 for the entire setting of the narrative. You will need your map in following the travelers as they journey between Caesarea, Joppa and Jerusalem.

Cornelius is a Roman centurion who had found the emptiness of the Roman mythology for purposes of religion and had developed faith in Jehovah as the only God. He was making practical use of his religion through prayer and practise. The knowledge that he gained made him eager for a fuller understanding of spiritual truths. In the midst of a certain prayer season he was directed to send messengers to Joppa and get Peter as a teacher of still larger spiritual conceptions.

Now Peter was a devout Hebrew as well as a growing Christian. National customs were part of his very life. He was strict in maintaining kosher diet. While awaiting summons for dinner he had a vision of various animals let down from heaven in a sheet, and was told to kill and eat. At once his Hebrew traning asserted itself as he declared that some of the animals were unclean. He was told that what God cleansed could not be unclean and the teaching of the vision was applied to those who at that very time were knocking at the gate The messengers from Cornelius were admitted and next day Peter went to the home of a Gentile that he might preach there and have full fellowship with them.

When Peter preached the full gospel as it is in Jesus Christ there was a renewal of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, as on the day of Pentecost. The same spiritual forces were released and without hesitation the evangelist proceed to baptize the many believers.

TY COBB STANDS FIRST

Picking the greatest figures in various lines of activity is a mild but often interesting sport, and a jury of twelve old timers recently indulged in the pastime of selecting the outstanding baseball players of history. An average of the ratings given by the individual jurors lists the heroes of the diamond in this order: Ty Cobb, Hans Wagner, Babe Rpth, Nap Lajoie, Eddie Collins, Willie Keeler, Al Simmons and Tris Speaker.

Seven of the twelve judges picked Ty Cobb as the greatest baseball player of all time, while most of the others gave him second place. The opinion of Cobb's admirers was well expressed by Connie Mack, one of the judges, who said:

"Picking the greatest player that ever lived is easy, I think. I pick Ty Cobb. He was a good fielder, the greatest base runner in the game's history, the fastest thinker, and the most consistent hitter. How can you name anyone else?"

NAGATA'S COMET

When Masana Nagata knocked off work as foreman of melon patch laborers near Brawley, Calif., on the evening of July 15, he was unknown outside of his own community. Today the name of Nagata is known throughout the scientific world, for that night he discovered a new comet which had escaped the eyes of all astronomers up to that time.

His discovery was made with a three-inch telescope, and reported to the great Mt. Wilson Observatory, where the genuiness of his find was verified. The new celestial visitor has since been observed by many astronomers and its orbit has been computed. It is some 167 million miles away and is receding from the earth. It will never be close enough to be visible to the naked eye. It has been named Nagata's comet in honor of its discoverer, as is customary in such cases.

Nagata is a Japanese, 45 years old, who has been interested in astronomy since he was a child, but only during the last 10 years has he possessed a telescope with which to pursue his study of the heavens. His only instruction in astronomy was obtained through a correspondence school course, and he frankly admits that he is only an amateur.

He will continue to till the soil by day and watch the stars at night, but his name will be perpetuated by the wandering comet which his keen eye discovered after professional astronomers with the finest telescopes had overlooked it.

FEEDING THE FARM HORSE

The method of feeding the farm horse has much to do with his condition and with utilization of the feed, says the Bureau of Animal Industry. If the horse bolts his grain, make him eat it slowly by spreading it out in a large, flat box, by putting some smooth stones (about 3 inches in diameter) in the box, or by mixing the grain with bran, cut hay, or similar feed. If two kinds of hay are fed, one of which is especially palatable, the horse may waste the feed by pulling out and trampling it. In this case, feed only one kind at a time. Feed some hay the horse fills up on hay afterwards, and the grain is forced through the stomach too quickly. Keep the grain box and manger free from chaff, dirt, and other trash. Feed the horse only at regular intervals in the work season.

expect to earn $78,000; and the college man or woman will earn $150,000. Based on these figures a high school education is worth in actual dollars $33,000 or about $8,000 for each of the four years. Using 180 days as average school year, this would mean that each day spent in school in accumuuative dividends to the high school boy would be worth nearly $45.00.

Education like most everything else cost money. That must of course be taken into consideration. We owe it to ourselves to provide for the future. The lowly squirrel knows that as she gathers her nuts and stores them away for the long winter months.

Now lets look at this going to school business just as we would look into any other business proposition. We must not consider the material side as I have dealt largely with in this article, but may we get the thought anew here and now, that the business of a school among other things is to reveal the higher qualities of the pupils as they come in contact with the personel of the teaching force in any school. May we teach the child to appreciate a sun set, to plant a rose garden, and walk therein in the late afternoon as was the Master's custom to do.

LEGIONNAIRES PLAN TO FIGHT RED ACTIVITIES

Each Post in State to be Asked to Select Committee for Work In Territory

Counter attacks "in all legal ways" against spread of communism in Alabama was set as a major objective of the American Legion by the department executive committee at the Tutwiler Sunday. The movement will be under direction of the newly appointed chairman of the Americanization committee, Capt. R. B. Laird, of Huntsville.

Each post in the state will be asked to name a committee to work in its territory.

A bulletin issued by the executive committee states:

"It has come to the attention of the department executive committee that a horde of Communists has descended upon our state spreading a flood of propaganda opposing our form of government, our social conditions, our race relationships and all the bases upon which our society rests, advocating race equality, destruction of law and authority by force and violence.

"The legal decision condemning the negro rapists in the Scottsboro cases, the action of authorities in Tallapoosa County in recent racial trouble, means used in Jefferson County to find the negro murderer of two girls, our system of race segregation are being viciously attacked by paid agents of the Communist party and by literature in its name.

"The legion believes in free speech, it condemns violence, it will work for the orderly government and peace in race relationships which we in this state must have."

Every Farm Family In Chilton County Should Plant A Fall & Winter Garden

Farmers Urged To Live At Home; Information Is Given On Planting Fall And Winter Gardens Including Planting Dates, Fertilizers, Etc.

Every farm family in Chilton County should plan and act now, to plant a Fall and Winter garden, and to store sufficient potatoes and other products for winter consumption. Sometime ago the urge was sent out for families to can up as many fruits and vegetables as possible and it is not yet too late for this to be done, and assure families of food for the Winter.

Perhaps the lesson from the ant who stores food in the summer for winter consumption is now needed more than in previous years. Following is some very timely and worthwhile information on the producing of a Fall and Winter Garden. This information has the approval of the County Agent, and the time to act in regard to this is Now:

The Fall And Winter Garden
By Julian Brown, Ex. Horticulturist

Select, as nearly as possible, a fertile, moist, well-drained location. Break the ground broadcast, turning it thoroughly at least once.

Broadcast heavy applications of barnyard manure; at least five two-horse loads should be used to the one-fourth acre. Where it is impossible to apply this manure, apply about 200 pounds of 8-4-4 to the one-fourth acre before planting. In addition to this, side dress the leafy vegetables, such as turnips and cabbage, with nitrate of soda at the rate of one to two pounds to one hundred feet of row.

Cultivate lightly after the vegetables begin to grow, just enough to keep down weed growth.

Where there is danger from hard freezes, vegetables such as beets, carrots, cabbage, and turnips should be dug and stored for the winter. Beets, carrots and turnips may be stored either in a cellar or in a specially prepared pit made in the following manner: (1) Select a well-drained area, dig pit about 12 inches deep, four to six feet wide, and long enough to accommodate all the vegetables to be stored. (2) Cover the bottom with pine straw. (3) Cut

Planting Of Dewberries In County Discussed At Recent Meeting And Several Acres Signed Up

At a recent meeting of growers of strawberries of the county the planting of dewberries for market and home consumption was taken up. Several farmers over the county have cultivated dewberries to an advantage and realized a profit from them. Following are some items of interest about dewberries:

The crop looks promising as a money crop. Dewberries ripen about two weeks after we are through with the strawberries. The yield and price usually run about like strawberries. It takes about 2200-2500 plants per acre. Plants cost about 1c each, set in January or February. It takes about 600 pounds of fertilizer per acre annually.

A contract has been let to E. L. Stringfellow of Maplesville for the erection of an additional class room to the Maplesville high school, according to information from the office of the county superintendent of education.

NEW USE FOUND FOR BRICK BROODERS BY MANY FARMERS

A new use has been found for brick brooders according to a letter from the office of the county agent. It is for drying fruit, such as peaches and apples. Simply spread the fruit on boards in the house, build fire and dry for two days. It would probably be better to spread on hardware cloth. This seems to be a much better method than that of spreading on top of house.

BIDS RECEIVED FOR KEEPER OF CO. ALMSHOUSE

Thirty-Three Bids Received By Commissioners To Be Looked Into Saturday

Members of the Commissioners Court of Chilton County met at the county almshouse last Monday for the purpose of receiving bids from people for the place of keeper of the farm for next year.

Information from the office of the Judge of Probate stated this week that thirty-three bids were received by the Commissioners Court for this place. This was said to have been the largest number of bids ever received for this place in this county. These bids will be placed before the next meeting of the Court which is scheduled to be held next Saturday morning, August 29, at ten o'clock in the morning, at which time it is hoped a decision will be made as to who will be the keeper of the almshouse for next year.

The Commissioners Court is allowing $8.50 per month for each inmate the information stated, and this amount is for food and incidentals. The county it was stated will furnish each inmate with clothing in the future, and this item is not included in the $8.50 per month for each inmate. It was stated that although the change in the keeper does not take place until next January 1st, they are making arrangements now so the keeper for the following year may be making preparations now for food for the inmates for his term, in the way of planting fall gardens on the property.

ABUNDANT FOOD SUPPLY ASSURES FARMER SAFETY

Survey Admits Money Scarce But Says Low Price Won't Spell Ruin

Twenty weekly newspaper editors of Alabama have written the State Department of Agriculture and Industries, stating that farmers have more food and feed crops for their families and livestock than ever before and that farmers have more occasion to be optimistic than other classes of people.

It is generally agreed by the editors that there has been a tendency among farmers not to place all their "eggs" in the "cotton basket" but have diversified by growing various crops. They have also reduced their cost of production.

G. A. Carleton, Grove Hill Democrat, wrote:

"With cribs filled to overflowing with corn, lofts swelling with oats and hay, big banks of potatoes, sleek cows,

DEEP SEA RODEO DAUPHIN ISLAND ENDED AUG. 19TH

Sam Powers Wins Prize By Landing 355 Pound Shark After 2 Hours Battle

By David Holt

More than 300 fishermen, representing twenty-four states trolled for game fish during the third Alabama Deep Sea Fishing Rodeo, at Fort Gaines, on Dauphin Island, at the entrance to Mobile bay, August 17, 18 and 19

A tropical disturbance was reported in the Carribean sea, though the storm went inland in Central America. A series of local squalls on the day before the rodeo began, kicked up a heavy sea in the Gulf and coluded the waters on the inside of Mobile bay, so that Monday was not an ideal fishing day, tho the sun shone bright and gentle, variable winds calmed the sea and gradually cleared the bay water. On Tuesday, the second day of the event fishing and conditions were greatly improved and on the final day, when the contest came to a close at 3 p.m., both bay and gulf were back to normal for the season.

Palmer Gaillard, Mobile attorney and sportsman, was awarded the prize offered for the first tarpon caught; the judges having established the rule that not more than one of the prizes should be given for one fish. The Pfleuger "Atlapac" reel offered by the Enterprise Manufacturing Co., Akron, O., rod and Ashway line, to make a complete deep-sea fishing outfit, offered as the first prize, were returned to the donors, as was a similar outfit, with "Templar" reel, offered as the second prize. The first was for the largest

IN LOVING MEMORY

Sweet memories linger in our hearts today
Of a little friend gone on her way.
Ruth Jones, her mission done—a little sunbeam
Gone back to the Son.

Sweet to meet, but sad to part
Seems the way of a human heart.
Yet we should try to be content
When the Master calls, and a life is spent.

One by one we all must go,
The certain time we never know.
There's a certain promise—how true it is—
We'll go home to Him, for we are His.

It's just a truth we all must face.
A child was called to fill her place,
Her body resting beneath the sod,
Her pure white soul gone home to God.

—Dedicated to the memory of Ruth Jones by her aunt, Mrs. Wiley Funderburk, Dallas, Texas.

NEWSPAPER TALK

When one reads an unusual news story about somebody who proposes to perform an unheard-of-feat, the item is often viewed with skepticism, and dismissed with a shrug of the shoulders as being "only newspaper talk." And more often than not that is all it amounts to.

Files of daily newspapers of February 5, 1927, contain such an item, which it is interesting to read again, in view of what really happened later. It is an Associated Press dispatch from St. Louis, in part as follows:

"A St. Louis-to-Paris airplane flight for the $25,000 Orteig prize is under contemplation by Captain Charles A. Lindbergh, chief pilot on the St. Louis-Chicago air mail route. Captain Lindbergh proposes to go alone, using a small plane. The flight to New York would be made in one day. The second leg of the trip, 3,200 miles, Lindbergh believes he can make in 32 hours."

Three and a half months later that dispatch was verified except that it took the flyer an hour and a half longer than he had estimated. This made more "newspaper talk," and Lindy is still making it.

MAIN STREET Looks at BROADWAY

New York Prisoners—

Small towns, with their one-cell "hoose-gows" in which tramps are the usual inmates for a one-night sojourn, think of New York as a terrible place, with its many thousands of prisoners. These men are held in police stations, the notorious Tombs, where Harry Thaw was held for the many months of his trial, the old Blackwell's Island, in the East River where sentences over a month and less than a year are served, and many other houses of detention.

Two Federal prisons are also located in the city, Governor's Island, where soldiers and sailors under sentence are immured, and Fort Wadsworth which ranks with Leavenworth and Atlanta, although very much smaller. There is also the Federal House of Detention, at West and Eleventh Streets, where men are held for trial.

No Conversationalists—

Fort Wadsworth, which has been used as a Federal prison for only a year, recently has been under fire in the newspapers. Charges were openly made that millionaire convicts had paid various sums ranging from $500 to $1,000 to be transferred from the gruelling hot penitentiaries at Atlanta and Leavenworth to the cool confines of the jail located at the Narrows.

A trip there to uncover the truth of such charges netted practically nothing as far as official information goes. Everybody at the lovely fort refused to give out the slightest bit of information. They even declined, pleasantly enough, to discuss what uniforms the inmates were forced to wear, although one could see it consists of a white broadcloth shirt, well laundered, and a pair of well-made blue trousers.

The only admission vouchsafed was that the place was run as an honor farm. The men were free to come and go within the confines of the quadrangle, which comprises about three acres of beautifully kept gardens tended by the men. There seemed to be no locks and bars, although we did not get to see the cells.

The records show there have been practically no escapes from the fort in the year it has been used as a prison. The guards, one can readily see, carry no firearms and could be overpowered by the men who outnumbered them one hundred to one.

Instead, there is a lack of any seeming restraint. Far instance, one of the guards wanted the chairs in which the convicts had been sunning themselves taken back into the building, and we expected to hear a sharp order. What we actually heard was this:

"Some of you fellows hustle those chairs inside, please."

The prisoners nearest to empty chairs merely picked them up and they melted out of sight in an instant. It all looked like a scene at a barn dance when the floor is cleared for dancing. Just one man to another.

Not Any Soft Snap—

Whatever truth there may be in the report prisoners paid to be sent to Fort Wadsworth from other hot prisons, there cannot be any idea the place is a summer resort. In the day time the breezes are balmy, the scenes of Uew York Bay beautiful, and the surroundings delightful. But the hidden hand is present.

All mail and packages are censored; prisoners are allowed to receive their families and friends only in the public room, and then only at stated intervals. Paraphrasing the soldier's army slogan during the war, "They're in the prison now!"

Studying the men, one was disturbed by the hang-dog expressions on their faces, the lagging walk, the lack of ambition. One prisoner alone showed signs of mental activity. We observed him furtively watching us from a distance. His expression was that of a snarling wolf behind bars. It made us sorry the guards were so noncommunicative as we would have liked to learn what he was serving time for.

Maybe he had crashed a national bank; or headed a rum running fleet; or was a notorious forger. Beyond question, he was a man of high mental attainments.

An Antiosocial Deduction—

Sizing up the convicts as a body forced the deduction that they formed a splendid body of men. They averaged away up in intelligence and social graces. In their well-kept "uniforms," they looked like men at a tennis match or yachting event.

Some of the younger men were handsome. Real heart-breakers. We saw one of these young chaps taking leave of a girl, at the end of the public reception hour. They clung to each other, sobbing pitifully, utterly oblivious to the convicts around them.

A desirable summer resort say the critics. Oh, Yeah!

My Experiences in the WORLD WAR

Three Meet Privately

At M. Clemenceau's suggestion the meeting of the council was adjourned at this point that Foch, Lord Milner and I might meet and examine the question and see if some agreement could not be reached. Whereupon we repaired to an adjacent room and went over the whole subject again.

My proposal was more liberal than the circumstances or my own views on the subject really warranted. It conceded priority for a limited number of the infantry and machine-gun units, but generally it contemplated the shipment of artillery for divisions and corps and railways troops, mechanics and labor troops for the service of the rear, all of which were badly needed.

It was the distinct understanding, however, as already promised by Foch, that if we would consent to make the concession as to infantry and machine-gun units the French would help us out with artillery when the time came to form an American army. But, of course, they could not furnish men for other services, nor for the services of supply, without which we could not function as an army.

Others Insist on Program.

When we met Milner, and especially Foch, insisted that the war would be lost unless their program was carried out. I repeated the arguments already presented to the council and added that I full realized the military emergency, but did not think that the plan to bring over untrained units to fight under British and French commands would either relieve the situation or end the war.

I pointed out that, regardless of the depressing conditions and the very urgent need of men by the allies, their plan was not practicable, and that even if sound in principle there was not time enough to prepare our men as individuals for efficient service under a new system, with the strange surroundings to be found in a foreign army.

Here Foch said: "You are willing to risk our being driven back to the Loire?"

I said: "Yes, I am willing to take the risk.

"Moreover, the time may come when the American army will have to stand the brunt of this war, and it is not wise to fritter away our resources in this manner. The morale of the British, French and Italian armies is low, while, as you know, that of the American army is very high, and it would be a grave mistake to give up the idea of building an American army in all its details as rapidly as possible."

"Can't Budge Him an Inch."

At about this juncture Lloyd George, M. Clemenceau and Premier Orlando of Italy, evidently becoming impatient, walked into the room. Milner met Lloyd George at the door and said in a stage whisper behind his hand: "You can't budge him an inch." Lloyd George then said: "Well, how is the committee getting along?"

Whereupon we all sat down and Lloyd George said to me: "Can't you see that the war will be lost unless we get this support?" which statement was echoed in turn by Clemenceau and Orlando. In fact, all five of the party attacked me with all the force and prestige of their high positions.

But I had already yielded to their demands as far as possible without disrupting the plans toward which we had been striving for over a year and a continuance of May shipments into June, without any provision for transporting artillery and auxiliary and service of supply troops, could not be granted without making it practically impossible in the future to have an American army.

After I had gone over the whole situation again and stated my position, they still insisted, whereupon I struck the table with my fist and said with the greatest possible emphasis: "Gentlemen, I have thought this program over very deliberately and will not be coerced."

This ended the discussion in committee and when the council reconvened M. Clemenceau stated that the question of American troops would be taken up again the following day.

When the council met for the afternoon session of the second day the discussion of shipments of American personnel was at once resumed. General Foch spoke at length, repeating previous arguments and giving a rather grandiose dissertation of the allied situation and the dire things that would happen unless the Americans agreed to the proposal of the council.

Lloyd George's Challenge.

Mr. Lloyd George in turn spoke at some length. He asserted that the Germans hoped to use up the British and French reserves before their own were exhausted and that the British had already called up nearly 7,000,000 men for their army and navy and had extended their age limits to all men between eighteen and fifty years of age.

"If the United States does not come to our aid," he said, "then perhaps the enemy's calculations will be correct. If France and Great Britain should have to yield this defeat would be honorable, for they would have fought to their last man, while the United States would have to stop without having put into line more than little Belgium."

Possibly realizing the unfairness of the comparison he quickly went on to say that he was sure I was doing my best to meet the emergency, and that:

"General Pershing desires that the aid brought to us by America should not be incompatible with the creation of the American army as rapidly as possible.

"I, too, am counting on the existence of that army and I am counting on it this very year to deal the enemy the final blow. But to do that the allies will have to hold out until August."

CHAPTER XL

"Speaking in the name of the American army and in the name of the American people," I told the supreme war council during the second day of its session at Abbeville, May 2, 1918, "I want you to realize that we are ready to bear as large a part as possible of the burden of the war. We all want the same thing, but our means of attaining it is different from yours.

"America declared war independently of the allies, and she must face it as soon as possible with a powerful army. There is one capital point to which I wish to call your attention. That is the importance to the morale of our soldiers of fighting under our own flag.

"America is already anxious to know where her army is. The Germans have once more started a strong campaign of propaganda in the United States, the purpose of which is to insinuate that the allies have so little confidence in the American troops that they are obliged to distribute them among their own divisions.

Tells of American Pride.

"The American soldier is as proud as any other, and the time will soon come when our troops, as well as our government, will ask to fight as an autonomous army under the American high command.

"I understand that in Prime Minister Lloyd George's proposal we shall have to examine the situation again in June before deciding for July.

"That is all that I can agree to at present to show my desire for solidarity with the cause of the allies."

Lloyd George had previously taken up a revised program submitted by myself and after some discussion he proposed that:

"America give us 120,000 infantrymen and machine gunners in May—the same number in June, with a supplement of 50,000 infantrymen and machine gunners if we 'scrape together' the tonnage to transport them."

He further proposed that the situation be examined again in June before deciding whether there was reason to extend to July the program decided upon for May and June. He then called on the council to accept his plan.

Inasmuch as the proposal submitted by Lloyd George contemplated the shipment of the numbers mentioned in British tonnage, leaving American shipping entirely free for us to use as we should decide, an agreement was soon reached, substantially as set forth in the following cablegram to the secretary of war:

Following agreement adopted by supreme war council May 2 at Abbeville. Will cable more in detail later: "It is the opinion of the supreme war council that, to carry the war to a successful conclusion, an American army should be formed as early as possible under its own commander and under its own flag. (Then it was thought the war would run to 1919.)

"In order to meet the present emergency it is agreed that American troops should be brought to France as rapidly as allied transportation facilities will permit, and that as far as consistent with the necessity of building up an American army preference be given to infantry and machine-gun units for training and service with French and British armies; with the understanding that such infantry and machine-gun units are to be withdrawn and united with their own artillery and auxiliary troops into divisions and corps at the discretion of the American commander in chief after consultation with the commander in chief of the allied armies in France.

A. E. F. Phone Girls.

"It is also agreed that during May preference should be given to the transportation of infantry and machine-gun units of six divisions, and that any excess tonnage shall be devoted to bringing over such troops as may be determined by the American commander in chief.

June Shipment Up to Pershing.

"It is further agreed that this program shall be continued during June upon condition that the British government shall furnish transportation for a minimum of 130,000 men in May and 150,000 men in June, with the understanding that the first six divisions of infantry shall go to the British for training and service, and that troops sent over in June shall be allocated for training and service as the American commander in chief may determine.

"It is also further agreed that if the British government shall transport an excess of 150,000 men in June such excess shall be infantry and machine-gun units, and that early in June there shall be a new review of the situation to determine further action."

American Troop Train Passing Through a French Town.

As stated in a cable from the secretary of war, received May 12, this agreement provided less priority for infantry and machine-gun units than recommended by the supreme war council. It was certainly much more favorable to the ultimate formation of an American army than we had reason to expect in view of the recommendations contained in note No. 18 of the military representatives, which, as we have seen, had been practically approved by the President. In the excitement over our agreement with the British the full purport of this commitment was not emphasized by the allies during the discussion.

Pooling of Supplies.

Another matter, taken up informally with the prime ministers after the conference, was that of pooling allied supplies. I explained its advantages and emphasized the saving in tonnage that would result. Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. Orlando did not commit themselves entirely, but accepted it in principle, as M. Clemenceau had done, and each agreed to designate an officer with business experience to meet with us at an early date to study the question.

With this beginning at least a step had been taken toward our objective, even though the principle might not be extended as far as we thought desirable. A few days later M. Clemenceau called a meeting in his office of the representatives, Gen. Sir Travers Clarke acting for the British and Col. Charles G. Dawes for the Americans.

School Days

It won't be long now before vacation is over and school will begin again. Then the young ones will get back into their own world, for in the life of the child the real world is that in which he mixes on equal terms with others of his own age. We older folk are too absorbed with the affairs of grown-ups to understand what the young ones are thinking about.

We are prone to think, as we grow older, that what we had in school is good enough for our children. That would be true if the world stood still, but it doesn't. In a changing world, the best education is that which makes the child alive to the changes, which brings him most closely in touch with the new things that we didn't know anything about when we were young. Everything is different today from yesterday; tomorrow everything of today will be out of date. The boy or girl who gains from his school work the sense of change, of constant forward movement steadily going on, has got the best foundation for success in life.

We don't think it is nearly as important to teach children how to do things as it is to teach them how to understand things. One way is to get more young people as teachers and on school boards. School systems must grow and change, just as the world grows and changes, and old folks are too apt to resist change. There must be old heads in school affairs, of course, but some who are still young enough to remember their own schooldays ought to have some say about school matters.

The Turning Tide

The public is beginning to buy again. Money is coming back into circulation more freely than for a year and more past. The textile mills are coming back toward normal production. The leather industry is showing a decided improvement. Sales of electric and gas refrigerators are increasing in almost every part of the country. Many of the smaller industrial plants are now running on full time and the larger industries, or many of them are putting on more help. The steel industry and building construction are still at low ebb and the railroads are not carrying their normal volume of freight and passengers, but those are conditions which a general revival in other lines will remedy.

The country is still suffering from overproduction of wheat, cotton and oil, among other things. It seems to us wrong and wasteful, however, to destroy what has already been produced, as is being advocated in some quarters.

It also seems to us unnecessary to resort to anything like the "dole" system. Nobody in the United States has approached starvation in this crisis except in the regions where the drought of 1930 was at its worst and in one or two "sore spots" in the bituminous coal districts. There may be more who will need help the coming Winter because their reserves are exhausted, but there will be more people in a position to give help, we believe. And there will be more and more jobs for those who really want to work.

How fast the tide of good times will come nobody can predict. The country has been suffering almost as much from over-prediction as from over-production, and we are not gifted with the power of prophecy. But we have history to back our belief that the United States of America will come out of this depression, as it has come out of every preceding depression, stronger and more prosperous than ever.

The Railroads In 1930

The complete operating statistics for the American railroads during 1930 have just been issued. To even the casual reader, they vividly illustrate the plight in which our principal transport medium finds itself as the result of high taxes, unregulated competition and business conditions.

As compared with 1929, the number of tons of revenue freight handled by the lines last year decreased almost 400,000,000. Freight revenue went down $742,000,000, and passenger revenue, $144,000,000. Car loadings were lower than in any year since 1922, number of passengers carried the least since 1903, and operating revenue the lowest since 1919.

The number of railway employes declined from 1,661,000 to 1,488,000. Total purchases for materials and supplies were $291,000,000 below 1929. Taxes were $48,000,000 under that year, due to lower earnings and the consequent decrease in income taxes. However, earnings declined relatively more than taxes, so that the percentage of revenue consumed by the tax collector was the highest in history.

The only bright spots are in the continued increase in operating efficiency. Several new speed and economy records were established and further progress was made in safety, both for passengers and employes.

In the interest of American progress and prosperity a way must be found to increase railroad revenue and thereby speed up activity of one of our greatest industrial employers and purchasers of supplies.

"ROUND TOWN"

---by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

> "The law of worthy life is fundamentally the law of strife. It is only through labor and painful efforts, by grim energy and resolute courage, that we move on to better things."
> —Theodore Roosevelt.

And it is a certainty that with a group of men so divided among themselves will have much difficulty in moving on to better things. I am not trying to 'jump on' somebody this week about things being done round town, but it appears to me that if there ever was a time when a group of men in a town needed to get their heads together and stick together for the good of the town, it is now. There is an old saying that, it doesn't pay to change horses in the middle of a stream, and certainly with prevailing conditions, we are in the middle of a stream.

Newspapers are full of what the Farm Board is advising the farmer to do, and when to do it. There have been committees appointed to advise on this and that. These committees are costing the government plenty of money, and yet, after all, they seldom ever get anywhere. My suggestion to the farmer is to get down and study his own problems and look over his individual situation, then go about making arrangements to overcome as much as possible. I notice in this issue there is a story about Fall and Winter gardens. That is certainly a splendid idea in my opinion. These gardens will at least give the families something to eat during the winter months and they can live at home. They certainly can't live at home with cotton at the price it is now.

Somebody said that Hoover will see that the price of cotton will go up right away, but that is all tommy-rot. They had an idea he will use that as a campaign pull if he runs for President again next year. I truly dislike to take advantage of a fellow's tough luck, but it occurred to me that the Republicans have by this time had enough of Hoover's "Full Dinner Pail' 'that was talked about so much during his big Prosperity Campaign before he became President. I see by the papers that there are families in the Birmingham district actually starving to death now. If they are in destitute circumstances now, it is pitiful to think of the condition they will be in this Winter.

The Democrats don't make any great big hullabaloo about the things they have done or will do, but just the same, things do run pretty good when there is a Democratic President sitting up there in Washington. Think of President Wilson. Of course we had a war when he was president, but nevertheless he made a splendid president. It brings chills to my spine when I think what would happen if we should be in the midst of a war now with the President and some other officials we have in Washington.

What ho. With another funeral establishment in Clanton. Now about this insurance business they are offering. It's kind of new to me, and I better look into it.

Clanton is pretty well loaded with various kinds of business houses. It is true that Clanton is a fine town, there's no mistaking that, but I am afraid that there are too many outsiders who are prone to believe we are a little better off than we really are, and therefore come here to establish a place of business, and when there is already one here of the same type, then they usually have a tough time getting off on the right foot, and sometimes they just have to quit. Then that leaves a bad taste in the new comers mouth about Clanton and he goes away thinking that Clanton ain't so good.

Of course that is not the fault of the people of Clanton. The new comer just misconstrued or something. Seems to me there ought to be a committee of far-sighted business men of Clanton, whose purpose is to pass on any kind of business that wishes to locate in Clanton. Let the would-be establisher have to present his plans to this committee and if the latter didn't think it would pay the new comer to open up, then tell him so, before he comes here and goes into business and loses his breeches. This would not only protect the man already in business, but would also be a protection to the new comer.

And what is this I hear about a commission form of government for Clanton. I been hearing something about it for sometime, but was kind of uneasy about saying something about it just yet, but I see now that it is pretty well known over the town.

Well, I am proud to see that this newspaper is still holding its place in the All-Alabama Eleven Weeklies, the eleven outstanding weekly newspapers in the state. Looks like there isn't much chance of winning another loving cup, as the committee doesn't consider a newspaper that was awarded it once. But the Victor Hanson Cup went to a deserving newspaper this year, The Greenville Advocate.

It won't be long now. The high school opens here on September 7th, and the kids will again be treking on to school with an arm full of books. Here's hoping that all who are old enough will be able to attend school, this year.

* * * *

Some of these days I think I'll sponsor a beauty contest among the young ladies of Clanton, to determine who is "Miss Clanton." It won't be one of these kind where votes are sold, because that is when money talks, not beauty. I want to conduct a beauty contest where curves, and perfection of anatomy is the main attraction. Clanton has never had anything like that and I would like to see a contest of that sort. I'm beginning to get kind of out of practice on my duties as Chilton County's Certified Critter Sizer and an authority on the fairer sex, but I'll get back into my own some of these days and make up for lost time, and you can lay to that. For some reason I haven't been able to find much material to work with lately. It all is about the same anyway, and I think a change would help matters. At any rate I'll be seeing you with some good dope next week.

Ordinance Regulating Traffic on Approach of Fire Truck Passed By City Councilmen Recently

An ordinance to regulate the driving of fire department vehicles while operated on official business and to regulate the drivers of other vehicles when fire department vehicle is going to or from a fire or when they are on official business was passed at a recent meeting of the City Council, according to a notice being published in this issue of the News.

This ordinance is very timely, and its provisions are such that when observed there should be no excuse for accidents occurring when the fire department of Clanton is on a call. The order states that drivers of vehicles are to drive to the curb as quickly as possible upon the sounding of the bell, siren or exhaust whistle of the fire department vehicle, while on official calls.

No set fine or punishment was set out in this ordinance to be imposed on anyone not observing the rules as set out, but it is presumed that a reasonable fine will be imposed on any driver of a vehicle not observing these rules. It will be advised that all persons read this ordinance and acquaint themselves with its provisions.

AN ORDINANCE

To regulate the driving of fire department vehicles while operated upon official business and to regulate the drivers of other vehicles when fire department vehicle is going to or from a fire or when they are on official business.

Be it ordained by the Town Council of the Town of Clanton, Alabama, as follows:

Section One. The driver of a vehicle upon a highway or street shall yield the right of way to fire department vehicles when they are operated upon official business and the drivers thereof sound audible signal by bell, siren or exhaust whistle. This section shall not operate to relieve the driver of a fire department vehicle from the duty to drive with due regard for the safety of all persons using the highways or streets nor shall it protect the driver of any such vehicle from the consequence of an arbitrary exercise of such right of way.

Section Two. Upon the approach of any fire department vehicle giving audible signal by bell, siren or exhaust whistle, the driver of every other vehicle shall immediately drive the same to a position as near as possible and parallel to the right hand edge or curb of the highway or street, clear of any intersection of highways or streets, and shall stop and remain in such position unless otherwise directed by a police or traffic officer until the fire department vehicle shall have passed.

Section Three. It shall be unlawful for the driver of any vehicle other than an official business to follow any fire apparatus traveling in response to a fire alarm, closer than five hundred feet, or to drive into or park such vehicle within the block where fire apparatus has stopped in answer to a fire alarm.

Read, adopted and approved this the 18 day of August, 1931.

J. LEE SMITH, Mayor.

Deep Sea Rodeo At Dauphin Island Ends

tarpon caught on artificial lure and the second for the largest caught on live bait.

The prize awarded Mr. Gaillard for the first tarpon caught was a "Long Key" Ocean City reel and South Bend Bait Company rod and line, donated by McGowin-Lyons Hardware Company, of Mobile.

This season, for the first time, the rodeo committee gave a prize for the first devil fish, or giant ray, caught by registered boat and contestants. It was won by the crew of the power cruiser Mari-Lou, Albert Gill, of Mobile, owner and master. It was a fine specimen of the sail fish, mounted and donated by Allen W. Davis, taxidermist. The big bat fish was harpooned near the outer bar, Mobile ship channel, on the third day of the contest, and was estimated to weigh 1,200 pounds.

The largest ling caught weighed only sixteen pounds, though this species grows to weigh one hundred pounds or more. The "Templar" reel awarded to H. G. Springman, of Louisville, Ky., for this catch was donated by the Paterson Hardware and Supply Company's Sport Shop, Mobile.

Ike Kohorns, fishing with Billy Paterson on his speedboat Play Mate, caught the largest king mackerel, 11 pounds, and won the Winchester shotgun offered by Sears-Roebuck & Co. The prize winning king in the rodeo weighed 24 pounds. It was caught by R. L. Bidez, rodeo official, who fished but a short time and had but the one strike. He had a similar experience in the recent contest; trolled for a short time, had but one strike and brought in the winning redfish, 32 pounds, for which he was awarded the South Bend rod, donated by the South Bend Bait Co.

Harry Crawford, Mobile advertising man, who gave the party aboard Capt. Earl Bryant's schooner, Sweetheart, of which the tarpon prize winner was a member, won the Benrus Shockproof wrist watch donated by Leon Wildberger, Mobile, for the largest blackfish or flasher. It weighed 15 pounds —not a large specimen.

The largest cavalla, 29¾ pounds, was caught by Kent Moss, Mobile, who received the "Ute" Waterproof suit given by Johnson Outboard Motor Co., Waugegan, Ill.

The prize for Spanish mackerel, a Pfleuger "Norka," Reel donated by the Loeb Hardware Co., Montgomery, went to B. C. Moore, Aldrich, Ala. Mrs. C. W. Taylor, of Washington, D. C., caught a number of large cavalla and received the prizes offered for the largest fish and also for the largest cavalla caught by a woman, a Shakespeare rod from Eugene Thoss,Jr., Mobile, and a pen and pencil set from Horder Stationery Stores, Chicago.

S. R. Powers, of Clanton, Ala., a Coosa river "doodler," landed a 335-pound shark with rod and reel after a two hours battle aboard a skiff far out in the Gulf and also caught a 11-pound bonito which captured a prize, a Shakespeare reel donated by Barnett Hardware Co., Montgomery. This was the first time the rodeo committee has offered a prize for sharks.

D. M. Nelson, of Chicago caught the largest speckled trout and won an assortment of Al Wilson spoons, donated by their manufacturer. In the 1929 contest he caught two of the three tarpon for which prizes were awarded. G. E. Barnes, of Mobile, caught the largest number of bluefish and won a rod given by Winchester Repeating Arms Co. L. G. Adams, Jr., won the juvenile prize for the largest number of spadefish caught in a given time from Fort Gaines wharf, and was awarded a tackle box by Teague Hardware Co., Montgomery, and J. Harry Edwards, of Henderson, N. C., made the largest catch of edible fish. He landed five bull redfish weighing a total of 65 lbs., and won a rod given by F. S. Ward.

In the annual fish liars' contest H. R. Watts, of Louisville, Ky., who told how a school of fish, name unknown, have learned to cooperate to thwart the fisherman. When one fish gets caught, the others grab it by the tail and back water. A competitor, Jimmie Mallon, of Dauphin Island village, exhibited a bird dog which goes in the boat with him and points fish. When ordered to do so, the dog dives for mullet and Jimmie had witnesses present to prove that it sometimes catches a boatload of the species known as "Biloxi bacon." Mr. Watts was given the fishing line offered by Game Warden August Oberhaus.

The cash prizes for boatmen are annually awarded on a system of points, ranging from 100 points for the first tarpon down to two points for each speckled trout, bonito and Spanish mackerel. Capt. Tubeson, of the schooner Ospray, Fairhope Single Tax Colony, won the first cash prize with 360 points; Capt. Ras Crenshaw, of the cruiser Seahome, the second prize, with 303 points and Capt. Earl Bryant, of the schooner Sweetheart, third with 200 points. Each boat having its own motive power is regarded as a separate unit in awarding prizes for boats. The yacht Jeanne and others of the largest class act as "mother ship" to a number of outboards and motored dories, making this rule necessary.

fat hogs, and yellow-legged chickens in abundance, Clarke County farmers don't need to be seriously concerned over the price of cotton or probable weevil damage.

"At the beginning of this season farmers of the county laid their plans to produce sufficient food and feed crops for their own needs. Already they have harvested a bumper crop of oats, the largest corn crop in the county's history is nearing maturity, and all other food and feed crops are being produced in proportion.

"We may not be flush with cash this fall, but everybody will be well fed, contented and happy."

Joe E. Pelham, Jr., Washington County News, states that farmers will have plenty to eat this Winter, but not any money to spend for paying taxes, reduced production cost.

Jemison Farm News

Department of Vocational Agriculture

The dewberry crop on the laboratory area at the school is making a fine growth. There are two varieties, the Young and the Lucretia. The Young is a new berry in this section. If it bears well it will be a fine berry to sell on the Birmingham and other local markets. The Young dewberry is a larger berry than the Lucretia and is much better flavored. However, every report from the Young tends to prove that it is highly perishable and that it cannot be shipped long distances as to northern markets.

The Lucretia variety has been tried in this section for three or four years. Among the growers of the Lucretia are Wilbur Bean of Collins Chapel, Eddie Little, G. W. Littleton, J. D. Suttley and C. H. Robinson all of Jemison. This is a berry that will stand shipping. The vine growth this season is good. Most of the growers used some nitrate of soda.

Wilbur Bean of Collins Chapel, and C. H. Robinson of Jemison have both been very successful in growing dewberries. They both spray or dust for anthrocnose and the strawberry weevil. Their opinion is that a farmer should not enter this field unless he means to fight anthracnose and strawberry weevil. Some years neither may appear, but nevertheless the vines should always be sprayed for anthracnose, and materials should be kept on hand to fight the weevil if it appears. These two men have never failed to make a crop of dewberries. Their yield this past season was 100 crates per acre, and the price was from two to three dollars per crate.

The market price of dewberries in the past has been good enough to justify the farmers growing them. It is a crop that requires fifteen months to get returns from and requires an acreage somewhat larger than the strawberry to ship in carload lots. These points make it more difficult than the short time seasonal crop and are points in its favor in that it cannot be as quickly or easily overdone.

No-one however, cares to take the responsibility for recommending crops for sale just now due to bad business conditions in general. Never-the-less, the growers of dewberries would like to see a number of farmers grow this dewberry and try this berry in carlots. The main expense in growing dewberries is obtaining the plants and stakes. The local growers use one stake for every two plants. The plants may be obtained from local growers at a very reasonable price. After a man has a small start he can soon grow enough plants himself to set an acre. Pine stakes 2 inches by two are used. Such stakes last for a long time. However, where a man hasn't that kind of timber he might use temporary stakes cut at a sawmill at a low price.

The dewberries are not fertilized near as heavily as strawberries. The cost of spraying is small and the labor involved in growing and harvesting the crop is not near as large as with strawberries.

It is not a crop to replace strawberries but a crop that may be grown in addition to strawberries.

Registrations from Oct. 1, 1929 thru March 31, 1930, totalled 257,993; the total figures for registrations for the corresponding period of time in the year 1930-31 being 220,154.

FARMERS AND FAIRS

Fair time is approaching and prospective exhibitors should be planning to make the most of their opportunities to show their best products. The real success of a fair, whether it be one embracing a state, a county, or only a local community, depends more on the number of exhibitors than upon the number of exhibits.

That a farmer can not display a great variety of superior products should not prevent him from entering at least a few. Even though a prize is not won, the effort to win is stimulating and beneficial to every exhibitor.

In these days of home demonstration agents more attention is being given to exhibits by farm women and girls and these should be encouraged in every possible way. There are few farms which could not make a creditable exhibit of some kind and no farm should be unrepresented in its local fair.

D. W. Haskew

Not long since two car loads of travelers stopped at a filling station in Chilton county, and while there they boldly drank from their hip flasks. The women in the party lighted cigarettes and smoked like toughs. The children of the one operating the station were there to wait on the customers, and they were astonished beyond measure. They had never seen the like before, and were frightened. A grand mother was in one of the cars, and she was asked by one of the girls traveling with her, "Grandmother, can you inhale the smoke?" The old soul pulled hard on her white tube of death and filled her lungs with smoke and then blew it out through her nose saying, "Oh Year." That was "Class" on wheels. The devil had that bunch out on exhibit. From reports that was a completed product. Roll up next.

I have made this observation that when men get money by dishonest methods, that money will never do them any good. When a man cheats in a trade, he may fill his purse with dollars, but the time will come when that money will hang like a millstone about his neck. He may make quite a sum by selling whiskey, by bootlegging rum, but that money will turn around and like a reptile plant fangs of poison into his very being. A man told me a few days ago that one night he went into a gambling den with a dime, and before he left that bunch of toughs on the inside, that he had won three hundred dollars. He came out of the room with the cash in his pocket, caught the next train for Mobile and there he reveled until the last penny was gone. This man said that he had won thousands of dishonest dollars, and that he could truthfully say that not one had done him any good. This man then hung his head and said, "Every penny I won in the gambling den has done me untold harm." If you want your money to do you good, get it by honest toil, honest trade and honest deals.

A man handed me a little batch of matches. I pulled one from the cluster, handed the box back to its owner and then tried to get fire out of the match. I scraped the match head on my shoe, on my pants, on a plank that was near. I worked hard to get fire out of that match, but it refused to yield its flame. Then the man handed me the box saying, "That match will not catch on fire until you scrape it on its own box." That reminds me of many church folks. They are not much for religion, only through their own denomination. Some Methodists, some Baptists, some Christians, some Presbyterians, refuse to show the flame of Christian activity until you scrape them on their own denomination. When they are pulled across the denomination to which they belong, they show fire every time. May God in heaven pity us because of our denominational selfishness.

A prominent author was treating the question of the home budget in American life. A teacher in Chilton county was discussing that budget with his class. In the list were such things as food, clothing, education, furnishings, radio, automobile, church and the like. The teacher asked his class to list the home items in their importance—showing which should be listed first, second, etc. The class listed food as first, clothing came in for second place. Education came in for third place. A long list was made and the church had not been mentioned. The professor asked, "What about the church?" Here is what the most of those students said in reply, "The church, why we never pay anything much to the church. If we pay anything at all it is after all these other items have been taken care of." Well, well, is that so? We have been suspecting the truth of that confession. Last fall I passed a negro country church, and the top of the hill was covered with people who were black. I asked the nature of the gathering, and they told me that it was a "Top Crop Meeting." They were there with the top crop results to pay off their preacher. How can we expect God to bless us when the bottom crop, all the first money we have, goes to take care of self. There is a bale of gospel in this statement, "Ged has got to be first, or he will not be at all."

One day I walked out into the plantation of a thriving farmer. He showed me the harvest that he had made, and finally we came to his fattening pigs. They were free in his peanut field. The most of those pigs looked good because they knew how to use a fat pasture, but there was one pig in that bunch that was very lean. The owner said of him, "There is something wrong with that pig. He has been in the peanut field a month and he is leaner than he was when I put him in here." Have you not seen many a lean cow strolling around in a fat pasture? That reminds me that God has made this old world into a "Fat pasture" for human spirits, but on every hand we are faced with lean souls. If you do not grow a big soul in God's pasture, there is something wrong with you. Have you not seen men and women in the possession of lean souls, while they stroll around in God's fat pastures? It will pay you to get yourself in that attitude so that you can use God's fat pasture, and then grow a fat soul for this world and for the world that is to come.

DRYING FOOD SAVES BY GOOD OLD METHOD

Drying is the oldest method of food preservation. Food prepared this way is less bulky and requires less space for storage. They are lighter in weight and can be packed in less expensive containers.

Because of the above facts, home demonstration extension workers of Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, are encouraging drying along with canning and other methods of food preservation this year.

Drying fruit is done in two ways, they said. One is sunlight, and the other is indoor drying. Sunlight drying is done at almost no expense. Dryers made at home of wood are used frequently. To protect fruit against insects it should be covered with a screen or mosquito netting. For protection against rain a good light cover should be used when needed.

Vegetables and fruits can be dried in an oven in trays or racks over the kitchen stove, or in a specially constructed dryer. The cook stove dryers or evaporators are small oven-like structures, usually made of galvanized sheet iron or of wood and galvanized. They are of such size that they can be placed on the top of an ordinary wood or coal range or kerosene stove.

These dryers hold a series of small trays on which fruits and vegetables are placed after being prepared for drying. There are many types of dryers on the market which are convenient, but homemade dry kilns w answer the purpose for family use.

The county home demonstratio agents are conducting demonstration in saving food products by drying, an also other methods.

Dentist—Well, Mr. Leisenring, yo will have to have an entirely new se of teeth.

Leisenring—That will be O. K. but I wish you would also patch up th old set to use as spares.

Montgomery, Ala., Aug. 23.—A warn- to the public that a new issue of ,000 shares of NuGrape Company of merica stock is being offered the in- sting public of Alabama without au- ority or approval of the Alabama Se- rities Commission, and that one H. Spiro, who is reported to have of- red the stock for sale in Montgom- , is not registered with the Com- ission, was issued yesterday by Hugh hite, president of the State Securi- s Commission.

he Commission further stated that had been informed that this stock is eing offered to the public at an ex- itant price" of $18 a share, when de from being in defiance of the law erning registration of such securi- s, the current market quotations list ch stock at $3.50 bid and $4 asked a are.

he statement of warning requests t any individual who has purchased y of this stock, or who has been so- ited to buy the stock, to communi- e with the Commission at once.

he warning of the Commission fol- s:

"Warning by the State Securities mmission of Alabama.

"In re: H. A. Spiro Grant and Com- y and Miller-Koch and Company, ing no par value common stock of NuGrape Company of America:

The Commission has received reli- le advice and has evidence in its files ich shows that the above named in- idual (together with an associate ose name is believed to be Pouchin) operating in this State representing above named companies in selling stock of The NuGrape Company of erica. On April 30, 1929, the Com- ssion upon the application of The NuGrape Company of America registered 10,000 shares of this stock. Due to the failure of this company to file the quarterly reports required by law and an annual audit required by the order of the Commission, this registration was suspended on July 30, 1929. Said suspension has remained in force since that date, consequently The NuGrape Company of America has only had authority to solicit sales for its stock during the months of May, June and July of the year 1929. This would also apply to any agent company or agent individual representing The NuGrape Company of America in selling such stock. The NuGrape Company of America through Grant and Company, Healey Building, Atlanta, Ga., and Miller-Koch and Company, 400 Madison Avenue, New York City, is now offering to the public a new issue of 100,000 shares of its capital stock. The individual Spiro has been offering and selling this stock at $18 per share to Alabama citizens.

"This is to advise the investing public of Alabama that neither Grant and Company nor Miller-Koch and Company have been registered by the Commission as a dealer pursuant to the provisions of the 'Alabama Securities Act' and that H. A. Spiro has not been registered as a salesman under the provisions of said act; further, that no part of the above described stock of The NuGrape Company of America has at any time been nor is now registered by the Commission as is required by the provisions of said Act. The investing public of Alabama is, therefore, warned against dealing with either of the above companies or with said H. A. Spiro, and against buying any of this stock, which is now so being illegally offered for sale in this State, either for cash or for other securities or property.

"The Commission has in its files a recent circular describing this new issue of stock of The NuGrape Company of America, which has been and is being sent through the United States mails to citizens of this State by the above named company, or companies. This offering circular, in the opinion of the Commission, is fraudulent and misleading on its face according to information previously furnished the Commission by The NuGrape Company of America.

"In the opinion of the Commission this stock is being offered to the public at an exorbitant price, $18 or more per share. On the basis of the company's own consolidated balance sheet dated May 31, 1931, the Commission's auditor, J. C. WAR ON PESTS COSTLY

Few persons, even among those engaged in the right, realize the enormous cost of the warfare which must be continually waged against the various forms of insect pests. It is estimated that the time and money expended for this purpose in the United States represents a loss of two billion dollars a year.

In spite of this mighty effort, insects and plant diseases destroy between 10 and 15 per cent of all food raised. This situation also confronts Canada and South America and to a large extent the entire world.

Grasshoppers and corn borers have caused much damage of late and among others which are particularly destructive may be mentioned the Japanese beetle, boll weevil, leaf hopper, red spider and an almost endless list of minor pests.

An eminent scientist declares that if continuous warfare were not waged against these destructive agencies they would cause a loss of 60 per cent of all crops. It is therefore imperative that every possible means should be employed to check their ravages.

To make it easy for motorists to recognize traffic cops in Paris, France, at night, each officer wears a helmet with a luminous band of phosphorescent paint.

Mrs. Charles Brindle of St. Louis sued her husband for desertion because while there are 21 rooms in his house he chose to sleep on the kitchen table every night during the last two years.

More farmers ought to carry more insurance and better insurance, economists say, particularly insurance against serious damage to growing crops.

ENGINES

A young man named Cramer astonished the world the other day by flying from Detroit to Greenland without telling anybody that he was going. The important thing about that flight is that he didn't use any gasoline. His engine is of the Diesel type, which uses anything in the form of oil for fuel. As he put it, he could fly it on butter or whaleoil if necessary.

The best gasoline engines today are only 8 per cent efficient—that is, they utilize only 8 per cent of the power in the fuel. Crude oil engines of the Diesel type are more efficient than that but still far from perfect. The next thing in engines will be one in which the waste of energy necessary to convert reciprocal motion, into protary motion will be done away with.

CONTRAST

The city of Chanute, Kansas, is probably the most prosperous community in America, if not in the world. Its people pay no taxes whatever.

The city of Fall River, Massachusetts, is in the hands of a receiver, because of inability to meet its obligations out of tax receipts.

Chanute gets enough revenue from municipally-owned gas, electric and water utilities to pay all the running expenses of the town as well as support an airport and a brass band. The city is run by business men. Fall River has been run by politicians for generations.

The principal argument against publiclic ownership of public utilities is that they would be run for the benefit of the politicians instead of for the benefit of the people. That is not always the case, as Chanute is proving.

PENSIONS

Today eevery man who seved in any of our wars before the World War is receiving a pension. Soon all the World War veterans will be on the pension roll. Employees in the civil service of the Federal Government now get pensions at the age of 70. Most states provide pensions for dependent mothers. Many states have old-age pension systems. Nearly all school systems now retire aged teachers on pensions. Many industries pension old employees. Firemen, policemen and other municipal employees in the big cities all get pensions after a given term of service. Even Al Smith is on the New York State Civil pension roll.

Much of the worry of middle age would be eliminated if everybody could look forward to a peaceful old age not dependent upon charity. Perhaps the incentive to thrift would be impaired, but I doubt that. And I believe that eventually some such system will be adopted everywhere.

SEAPORTS

Chicago got greatly excited a short time ago when the Swedish freighter "Anna", with a cargo of barbed wire and sardines entered the Chicago River with the Swedish flag flying. It has long been Chicago's dream to become a seaport. Chicago enthusiasts picture a deep-water channel from the St. Lawrence through the Great Lakes to the very heart of the United States

That is an engineering possibility, but whether it would pay is another question. Ocean transportation is always a risky venture. Very few shipowners are making money these days. The demand is constant for greater speed and quicker "turn-around" between ocean terminals. The passage through any inland waterway is necessarily slow.

However, Chicago has set her heart on becoming a seaport and what Chicago goes after she usually gets.

PARALYSIS

The East this year is having another epidemic of infantile paralysis. The West is comparatively free from this terrible scourge. It is one of the few diseases of which the exact cause is still unknown to science, and for which no effective preventive measures have been devised. Cure is uncertain, and complete recovery practically unknown.

While it cripples the bodies, especially the legs, of its victims, infantile paralysis sometimes seems to sharpen the brain. Governor Roosevelt of New York was infected by this disease, which seldom attacks adults, eight years ago. He is able now to walk without leg braces, with the aid of a couple of canes, while his mind is as active as ever. I know one girl who was infected in the 1916 epidemic who refused to be licked by her affliction and has succeeded in establishing herself as a fashionable milliner, making annual trips to Paris. One of the most seriously crippled boys I ever saw, a victim of paralysis at the age of seven, graduated this year at the top of his class in a western university

It is small consolation to a mother whose child is deprived of its normal physical life by infantile paralysis, to realize that it still has a chance to develop its mental activities, but there is always that ray of hope.

Mineral Springs News

The people of Mineral Springs and Cane Creek communities are going to meet at the Mineral Springs church Sunday afternoon at two o'clock to sing, and organize a singing in the communities, and would like to have the cooperation of the Pleasant Hill and other singers. Everybody come.

The revival at this place closed Friday night with baptism Saturday morning. There were thirty-seven additions to the church, twenty-seven by baptism. It was the greatest meeting that has been at Mineral Springs. It was conducted by the pastor, Rev. Homer Carroll, and Rev. Davis Durbin.

The prayer meeting and B. Y. P. U. were fine Sunday night. We had a large number of visitors, and invite them back.

There will be preaching here Saturday night and Sunday by Rev. Trice.

Brief News Notes

Two final state short courses for 4-H club girls will be held in Montgomery, October 10. One will be the contest at which the State Health champion will be selected; and the other will be the final dress revue.

Tenant farmers now total nearly half of America's farm population, in contrast with conditions 50 years ago when three out of every four farmers owned their land. An increase of 3.8 per cent in tenant farmers since 1925 was reported by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

F. W. Burns, extension livestock specialist at Auburn, announces three livestock shows in Alabama this fall. They will be for 4-H club members and others, as follows: Montgomery, September 15-16; Huntsville, September 22; and Anniston, the week of October 12

The U. S. Department of Commerce has found that 10,000,000 homes in the United States are now equipped with radio sets, and Dr. Julius Klein, assistant secretary of commerce, thinks that the industry is probably half grown. Ten million homes is about one-third of the total in the country

Potash produced in the United States in 1930 amounted to 105,810 short tons of potassium salts, equivalent to 61,270 short tons of potash, according to the Bureau of Mines. Potash materials of domestic origin sold by producers in 1930 were valued at $2,986,157 f.o.b. plants.

The marriage ceremony for Miss Muriel Ball and Williaf Peters of Mansfield, Eng., was performed by the brides father grandfather and uncle, all methodist ministers.

Two detectives hidden beneath the pulpit in a church in Liverpool, found that the verger, James Ellison, was the thief who had repeatedly robbed the offertory box.

Clanton Methodist Church

D. W. Haskew, Pastor

We have preaching next Sunday, but no preaching service at night. The Christian church in Clanton will begin a meeting that day and we call in our night service so that our people may worship with them.

I heard a woman say last Sunday, "My mother taught me that I had a place in my home, in my community and in my church that no other one could fill, and I have always been in my place doing my best." That thing is true in your case. You have a place in your church, and no other one can fill it for you. When you are not at church, your place is vacant.

Fill your place in the Sunday school at 9:45. Another Sunday when we had more present than we had the Sunday before. Help our continued growth by being present next Sunday.

We are delighted to report the membership of Mrs. Ernest J. Brown. She lives in the stucco bungalow across the street in front of Mrs. J. Q. Wade. Make her feel at home with us.

How to train BABY'S BOWELS

Babies, bottle-fed or breast-fed, with any tendency to be constipated, would thrive if they received daily, half a teaspoonful of this old family doctor's prescription for the bowels.

That is one sure way to train uny bowels to healthy regularity. To avoid the fretfulness, vomiting, crying, failure to gain, and other ills of constipated babies.

Dr. Caldwells' Syrup Pepsin is good for any baby. For this, you have the word of a famous doctor. Forty-seven years of practice taught him just what babies need to keep their little bowels active, regular; keep little bodies plump and healthy. PAINS QUIT COMING

"When I was a girl, I suffered periodically with terrible pains in my back and sides. Often I would bend almost double with the intense pain. This would last for hours and I could get no relief.

"I tried almost everything that was recommended to me, but found nothing that would help until I began taking Cardui. My mother thought it would be good for me, so she got a bottle of Cardui and started me taking it. I soon improved. The bad spells quit coming. I was soon in normal health."

PILOT CLUB TO CAN FOOD FOR WINTER'S NEEDY

Banks Will Help Finance Cover Crops

FARMERS URGED TO CONSIDER COVER CROPS

Plans Made Tues. at Meeting Of Bankers, Farmers At County Agent's Office

Tuesday afternoon, upon the call of John C. Page, banker of the county, and C. E. Stapp, County Agent, the bankers of the county and about a dozen farmers and the vocational teachers met at Mr. Stapp's office to consider the financing of farmers in planting vetch and winter peas this fall.

Mr. Stapp advised that all the banks in the county, except the Bank of Maplesville, were officially represented, and that the Bank of Maplesville rendered a satisfactory excuse.

After some discussion by those present as to the value of vetch and Austrian winter peas, the bankers agreed to help finance the planting of vetch and peas this fall. County Agent Stapp, was instructed to find out who wants loans for seed, the amount of loans wanted, and with what banks the farmers want to do business individually in this matter. Then Mr. Stapp will turn the cards of the individual farmers over to the bank of their choice for approval for loans.

Mr. Stapp made the statement that $2 per acre spent for vetch or peas this fall could be made worth more than $5 per acre spent for soda next spring. This statement was endorsed by Willie Hamilton, Mr. Allen, and several other farmers who were present.

With the splendid spirit of cooperation shown by our banks, and their hearty response to help in this great movement, it seems that every farmer in the county should try to arrange to plant vetch and peas this fall.

Mr. Stapp states that 202 farmers have already booked a total of 45,800 pounds of seed, or enough to plant about 2,000 acres. This seems like a lot of seed, but Mr. Stapp stated, it is only a drop in the bucket compared to what should be planted this fall.

Rev. J. R. Bean Weds Mrs. Annie Armstrong

Last Sunday was an exceptionally busy day for Rev. J. Robert Bean, pastor of Friendship Baptist Church. Bro. Bean is a very energetic sort of preacher, and is able to expedite lots of work in a short time, but last Sunday deserves special mention even for a man of his potential ability.

He came down from his home in Bessemer Saturday and filled his regular appointment that night at Friendship. Sunday morning baptismal services were attended to, he preached at 11 o'clock, got married at 3 o'clock, and filled his regular appointment again at 7:30 in the evening.

Now, of course, crowding all of these actions into one day's work would not have been noticed so much had not one of them been his getting married. Perhaps that is the reason so much significance is attached to the incidents of the day.

The home of Rev. M. J. Parrish was the scene of the ceremony, and the other contracting party was Rev. Parrish's daughter, Mrs. Annie Armstrong. The ceremony was performed by the father of the bride. A number of relatives of the Parrish family from Birmingham and other places, as well as several friends of the couple from the community, gathered out in the shade of the spreading oaks and witnessed the ceremony so impressively administered by the aged father and minister. After the marriage, all those present filed by and shook hands, wishing Rev. and Mrs. Bean a long life chuck full of happiness and sunshine.

Mrs. Bean is the widow of the late W. J. Armstrong, and is the mother of three sons: J. Robert Bean is the son of Pendleton C. Bean, who died at Jemison in 1890. He now has two sisters in Chilton County—Mrs. John L. Gore of Union Grove and Mrs. Bud Webb of Jemison. He has one brother, Eugene Bean, at Bessemer. At the age of 20 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Scurlock of Bibb County, in 1889. Has three sons and one daughter, the oldest son living in Charlotte, N. C., the next in Bessemer, and the girl, the youngest child, living in Talladega County. Mrs. Elizabeth Bean died at Bessemer in 1928.

Rev. and Mrs. Bean will make their home in Clanton. His work as pastor in Jefferson County will be abandoned and Rev. Bean will concentrate his work in Chilton County. He is now pastor of two churches in the county—Friendship, where he preaches each fourth Sunday and Union Grove, each second Sunday.

High School Faculty To Gather At School Soon

discussed towards making the year 1931-1932 better in every possible way than any previous year.

"Most of the faculty are well known to the patrons and children of the school, there having been only one change made. We feel that we are to be congratulated in this particular matter for it is not only of great value for a child to have an able and efficient teacher, but it is worthwhile that the child know and understand his teacher. Having been associated with the majority of their teachers during the past year, the children of Chilton County High School will begin the new year with this distinct advantage.

"The young men and young women who compose the faculty are not only able and efficient teachers, but they are vitally interested in their work and in the children they teach. The Principal of the school is in position to know from past association and recent communication that these teachers have the welfare and interest of the school on their hearts and that they are looking forward to the opening of school. We trust that the patrons of the school in particular and the citizens of the town in general will give them a hearty welcome back to town, and again assure them of their loyalty and cooperation. It is not mere talk. We are indeed determined to make this year count in the life of every child who enters the doors of our school.

"For the benefit of any new patrons we again publish the names of the faculty:

Miss Bernice Williams, Luverne, mathematics; Miss Nell E. Wells, Jemison, English; T. H. Walker, Lawley, manual arts; James V. Varnell, Falkville, science; Miss Margaret Kendrick, Luverne, English; Miss Josephine Martin, Birmingham, social studies; Miss Bonnie Clyde Griffin, Thorsby, science and physical education; Mrs. W. M. Greene, Birmingham, history; Miss Margaret Brown, Fairfield, home economics."

ASK FARMERS TO BRING SURPLUS PRODUCTS TO AID IN THIS WORK

More Livestock In Alabama Foreseen

An improvement in livestock farming in Alabama is expected because of low prices for cotton. In this way farmers will improve their farming; they will provide a weekly income, they will improve their soil; and they will create a better balanced system of farming.

F. W. Burns, extension livestock specialist at Auburn, said that the biggest improvement and increase will be with dairy cows. Instead of increasing numbers rapidly the tendency is to get better dairy cows, produce feed for them, feed them better, and take better care of them, Mr. Burns said.

The goal is to make dairying a part of general farming. Already this has been done on thousands of farms and it will be extended to other farms, Mr. Burns said. A farmer who has a few cows and produces milk or cream and sells it has a weekly income. Even though it may be small it is a big help in the operation of the farm. Dairying also provides productive employment every day in the year, which is not true of cotton.

More attention will be given to hogs, sheep, and other livestock, Mr. Burns continued. Hogs will not be added on a big scale but rather as a unit of general farming because they can be handled in this way efficiently and at a profit.

Along with animals of good breeding, the county agents are urging the production and use of home-grown feed, including good pastures, because pasture is the cheapest feed a farmer can provide. With fall and winter approaching a special effort is now being made to save all the feed that has been made.

School Term Question Is Arising In County

bearing no due date. Recently we received about $1,800 in warrants from the state with a notation to hold them until the state treasury is in a condition to pay them. Such warrants will not mean anything to us unless we can get the cash. The Legislature adjourned without making any provision for taking care of the amount of money due us from the state. If the condition of the state treasury does not improve we will continue to receive these due bills and we will, therefore, not have any money to operate schools except the county funds. The county funds will be sufficient to operate the schools about one-half year. It seems to me that it will be unwise for us to continue to operate our schools for a longer period than we have the money with which to pay the teachers. No one seems to be able to tell us when the state will be able to pay their money. As I see it the only business like way to handle the matter is to operate our schools as long as the money holds out then when that has been exhausted let all schools, including high schools, close.

"I do not know just what the County Board of Education will do at their meeting next Friday but it seems to me that the wise thing to do is to set up a half-year program. At the end of the half-year program the state treasury will be in a condition to pay these warrants if they are going to pay them at all this year. If they are not going to be able to pay them this year I believe the wise thing to do is to close when the half-year is over but we will have to be governed entirely by the condition of the state treasury. We will appreciate any suggestions that anyone may have relative to this matter and if you have suggestions we will be glad to have them on or before Friday, August 28."

Respectfully yours,
B. LAWRENCE,
County Supt. Education.

DATE OF SCHOOL OPENING MAY BE DELAYED SOME

Trustees of County Schools to Meet at Courthouse Today To Discuss Matter

In a letter sent to all trustees of the schools in Chilton County by Superintendent of Education B. Lawrence this week, it was stated that trustees have been asking if it would not be a wise idea to delay the opening of the schools, in view of the possibility of the school term being cut short this year.

At a meeting held sometime ago, it was announced that the opening date for high schools would be Sept. 7, and for other schools on October 5th.

A meeting of all trustees of the county schools has been called for this afternoon at three o'clock at the courthouse in Clanton to discuss this matter, according to the letter sent to the trustees by Supt. Lawrence, and it is hoped that the matter will be gone into in detail and the definite announcement will be made as to the date set for the opening of the schools of the county immediately.

Harlon Bean Selected From Thirty-Three Applicants For Keeper's Place

Out of the thirty-three applicants for the place as keeper of the county almshouse for the year 1932, Harlon Bean, of the New Salem Community was selected last Saturday by the Commissioners Court of Chilton County, to fill this place, according to information from the office of the Judge of Probate.

Among the applicants for the place of keeper were some of the best known men of the county, and some of the best qualified men for the job, as the list which follows shows. Instead of allowing the keeper the $8.50 per inmate per month, as was stated last week, the information stated that this was changed to $11.00 per inmate per

THE LEADER DOES SPLENDID BUSINESS ON MEN'S SUITS

In last week's issue of the county papers, Mr. Lande, operator of The Leader, a popular dry goods store of Clanton, carried an ad telling of some exceptional values to be found at his store in men's and boys suits.

In a statement to a representative of the News Monday of this week, Mr. Lande said that they had sold approximately seventy of these suits within a period of three and a half days.

This no doubt sets a record in Clanton on sales on men's and boys colthton on sales of men's and boys clothing. Judging from comments from many of the men who purchased these suits, they were exceptional bargains as advertised by Mr. Lande. He stated that they still have a large number of these suits in stock at these low prices.

LIQUOR, STILL, BEER AND MEN NABBED BY LAW

Four Men Arrested And Still Destroyed In Single Raid By Sheriff's Forces

Seven men were arrested during the past few days by Sheriff Gillespie and his deputies, and one small still and a quantity of beer destroyed, according to information from the Sheriff's office Monday.

On the raid on the still, four men were arrested in connection with the outfit, the information stated. The still was a small copper outfit and in full operation when the officers arrived on the scene, which was located in the north western part of the county. One of the men made bond and the other three were carried to Montgomery and placed in jail. One hundred and fifty gallons of beer and approximately three gallons of whiskey were also found at the still.

Other arrests included one for violating the prohibition law, one for driving a vehicle while intoxicated and one for presenting firearms. This report covered arrests through Monday of this week.

J.B. Atkinson's Father Died Last Monday

Striking grief to the hearts of his countless friends and to members of his family, J. C. Atkinson, age 69, died suddenly last Monday, August 31, following a wound received near his heart from a pistol bullet inflicted as the pistol he was working with accidentally discharged Monday at his home in Sylacauga, Alabama.

The deceased was a citizen of good standing of the Talladega County town, and has been a resident there since 1903, coming there from another part of the county. The large number of people attending the funeral, not only from Sylacauga, but from other places, and the many beautiful floral offerings attested to the great love and esteem held for this aged citizen, who is the father of one of Chilton County's prominent attorneys, J. B. Atkinson.

He was a devoted and long-time member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and the story of his Christian life was brought out by the minister conducting the funeral services, and by those older residents of the county who knew the deceased for the greater part of his life.

Funeral services were held at the home of the deceased and conducted by the Rev. W. E. Faust of Sylacauga, and these last rites for this beloved citizen seemed to touch the hearts of all present. Interment followed in the Sylacauga cemetery with Howard & Darden of Sylacauga in charge. The deceased is survived by his second wife, and three children, Joseph B. Atkinson of Clanton, C. C. Atkinson, of Gadsden, and Mrs. S. W. Killgore of Rockford, and several grandchildren and other relatives.

Many of the club boys in the county are already grooming and blanketing their cattle in preparation for the coming show in Clanton. About ten of the best individual animals belonging to Calf Club members are to be carried to Anniston on October 12 to take part in a district show, Mr. Stapp stated.

WIDELY KNOWN THORSBY MAN DIED SUNDAY

E.F. Mead Succumbs Following Lingering Illness At His Thorsby Home

Mr. E. F. Mead died Sunday, August 30, at 3:30 P. M. after a lingering illness and was buried in the Thorsby Cemetery Monday afternoon. Each conducted the services at the home.

Mr. Mead was seventy-seven years, eleven months and nineteen days old at his death. He was born in Cleveland, Ohio, September 11, 1853, and moved with his family to Thorsby in 1896, being one of the first of the northern people to settle in Thorsby. Mr. Mead has been in the concrete business for about twenty-five years, and was respected and well thought of by everyone who knew him. He served three terms as mayor of the Town of Thorsby.

He leaves a daughter, Mrs. George Kimball, of Leith, North Dakota, and two sons, Earl of Calera, Alabama, and Clyde, of Thorsby. Mr. Mead's death was preceded by that of his wife, who died in May, 1928.

"STOP MY AD, IT SOLD ALL MY APPLES AND MORE, TOO"

It pays to advertise in the News, says Judson Strock of Verbena. Mr. Strock ran a small classified ad in the News last week advertising some apples for sale. This week the News received a card from him telling us to stop the ad that it sold all his apples and that he could have sold more if he had had them. Thanks for the kind comment, Mr. Strock.

PRINCIPALS IMPLY TEACHERS GOT RAW DEAL

Ask Legislation To Make Up Back Salaries Due From 1930-31 Session

Montgomery, Ala., Aug. 29.—High School principals of Alabama at the close of their annual meetings here yesterday formally requested members of the Legislature to do something about paying the past due salaries of teachers in the State in the event the Legislature is assembled in extra session.

The request was made in a resolution unanimously adopted by approximately 200 principals who attended the meeting. The Association also elected officers for the year, and adopted several other resolutions.

In the resolution calling upon members of the Legislature for relief in the matter of overdue teachers' salaries the Principals implied that the payment of all other State and county employes in cash while the teachers were forced to accept "script" in counties where State warrants could not be cashed readily, amounted to a discrimination against the teachers.

The resolution did not mention the existence of any discrimination but merely called attention to the fact that

COTTON GINNINGS HERE SHOW SLOWNESS IN GATHERING

Farmers in this section are not being fast about gathering cotton this year—at least not as fast as they were last year. According to information from a reliable source, about this time last year there had been something like two hundred bales ginned. This is compared with something like twelve or fifteen bales ginned in Clanton up to date this year.

H. E. CULVER BRINGS FIRST BALE OF COTTON TO CLANTON

The first bale of cotton brought in Clanton and ginned by the Planters Gin & Warehouse Company, this season, came from H. E. Culver. The bale weighed 554 pounds and was ginned on August 26, and rated as strict middling. The bale was purchased by W. I. Mullins and five and three-quarters.

One of the latest additions to the attractiveness of one of the main streets of Clanton at night is a new neon sign installed this week at the Upchurch Drug Company. The sign is one of the most attractive in Clanton and was installed by the James Sign Shop.

PILOT CLUB OF CLANTON CANS FOR WINTER AID

Movement Greeted by Hearty Approval From Over The Entire County

A commendable movement pushed forward by the women of Clanton, was brought to a close here Saturday when the Pilot Club of Clanton, sponsored a canning program to can all kinds of vegetables and fruits for use in supplying needy families of Chilton County during the Winter months.

A call was sent out over the entire county asking farmers to donate surplus fruits and vegetables to this work, and delivery was made to Clanton by some, while citizens of the town furnished automobiles to bring the products in.

Two days were set to do this work in and members of the Pilot Club, assisted by other women of the town, gathered at the basement of the Baptist Church here where cooking paraphernalia is located and with something like 30 women, Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts of Clanton putting forth all effort in preparing the products for canning.

The work of putting the fruits and

Central Singers Will Elect Officers Sunday

Next Sunday afternoon at Concord the Central Singing Society will elect officers for the coming year. This will be the beginning of the second year of the society. The outgoing officers are President, Prof. W. M. Devaughn; vice presidents, O. L. Devaughn and L. T. Grant; Secretary, T. E. Wyatt; Committee, Jesse Baker, C. H. Robinson and Ammie Boswell. Some disposition of the matter of new books will be made at the Concord meeting also.

The society met last Sunday afternoon at Maple Springs; a large class was present and the singing was fairly good. Everybody buy you a new book—one of each kind, and have them at Concord next Sunday afternoon. Don't depend on the society furnishing everybody a book this year, for they will keep on hand only enough extra books to supply visiting singers. All members of the society will be supposed to buy and keep your own books this year.

CO. BOARD OF EDUCATION SETS SCHOOL PROG'M

Meeting Results In Setting of Program For Only Half Year With Option

The Chilton County Board of Education met at the office of the county superintendent last Friday for the main purpose of outlining a program for the schools in the county for the coming term.

At this meeting it was decided by the board that a program for only a half term would be planned at present, due to the apparent lack of funds which are to come from the state for school purposes.

It was stated, however, that should the funds from the state be paid before or about the end of the half term as planned by the board, then the schools of the county would operate a full term. In case this money is not paid by the state, then, it was stated the schools will close immediately

MISBRANDED SEED SWINDLE IS REVEALED

Alabama Farmers Vicitimized In Purchase of Soy Beans; Investigation On

The Alabama Department of Agriculture has declared war on misbranded seed and is cooperating with Federal authorities in bringing suit against out-of-state seedmen who sold Alabama dealers and farmers misbranded soy bean seed for planting last Spring.

Announcement to this effect was made Friday by Seth P Storrs, commissioner of Agriculture and L. N. Allen, seed analyst, who reported that a number of Alabama farmers had complained about their soy beans being a dwarf variety of little value for hay instead of a hay producing variety as branded.

"We have written county agents in the counties originating the complaints asking that farmers make affidavits to the effect that their soy beans are not of the variety purchased. We are also

GOOD NEWS, BUT WHO WROTE IT?

This week the News received an interesting bit of news in regard to a singing convention. to be held There was no name signed to the letter and consequently we were unable to use it, as all newspapers have a rule that articles are not usually used unless there is a signature to them. This does not mean that the name of the person will be printed, but we must know where it came from.

Prof. Warr Points Out Several Important Items In Regard To School Opening

Only three more days and a nice long summer's vacation will have come to a close and the high school boys and girls of Clanton and surrounding community will bid farewell to these days and weeks of leisure times and will again turn their hearts and faces towards their "dear old C. C. H. S."

We trust that the summer vacation has been profitable as well as pleasant and that each boy and girl will resume his or her duties with a feeling of responsibility, for going to school is indeed the child's greatest responsibility and should be as big a business to him as his father's business is to his father. However, your child will not feel this responsibility, and will not feel that he is carrying on a big business, unless the parents aid the teachers in impressing these things upon him. Will you please see that your child is in readiness next Monday to commence the new school year. You may rest assured that the teachers are prepared

Dr. Samuel Ezell Completes Nine Years Service Last Sunday As Pastor Clanton Baptist Church

Last Sunday, August 30, marked the closing of nine years of faithful service as pastor of the Clanton Baptist church for Dr. Samuel J. Ezell, who will enter upon his tenth year here next Sunday.

Nine years ago, Dr. Ezell came to Clanton with his family to become pastor of the local Baptist church. These nine years he and Mrs. Ezell have been in Clanton have been very colorful for this popular and loved couple, and their untiring work in behalf of church work of all kinds has made a lasting impression on the minds of the people of this section of all denominations.

In his sermon of last Sunday Dr. Ezell reviewed his work of the past nine years, telling his congregation with interest, of the many things he has tried to do for his people here. Next week the News hopes to carry a more detailed account of the fine work done here by Dr. and Mrs. Ezell.

CUBA

We have learned a few things about Cuba and the Cuban people since we went to war with Spain, 33 years ago, to set Cuba free. The Cuban people are about as badly off under self-government, so-called, as they were under Weyler. When sugar and tobacco sell at high prices they are happy; when these commodities are cheap, as they have been for some years, there is revolution. We gave them political freedom but we did not give them the more important economic freedom .

Nobody today wants to annex Cuba to the United States, least of all the American speculators who have built race-tracks, hotels and gambling houses there to attract Americans who want to carouse and waste their money. Under American rule Cuba would have to be officially "dry" and that would start another revolution.

ICE

Greenland the latest scientific explorers tell us, is a great bowl of ice several thousand feet deep, surrounded by high mountains. This ice has been gradually melting since the last Ice Age, some 20,000 years ago. As it melts, the land below it will rise and the tropical vegetation which once flourished near the North Pole, and of which traces are still found, will grow there again.

By that time all of the white races of man will have moved much farther North than they live now. Then will come another Ice Age and population will be driven back toward the Equator. That is what has happened at least three times in the earth's recent history, and there is no reason to doubt it will happen again Explorers from the universities of Nova Zembla and Spitzbergen will find traces of human handicraft in the tropical jungle growing where Chicago now stands, and will wonder what gods these primitive people worshipped.

AGE

I got a bill the other day from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, where I vote, for $1, with the information that this was my annual "Old Age Assistance" tax. It seems to me like a good way of creating a fund for the care of aged persons. The direct tax which every individual has to pay has the effect of bringing government and its activities more closely to the attention of everybody who pays it. Massachusetts voters are going to watch the Old Age Assistance program more closely than they would if it were merely a matter of paying for this sort of relief out of the general funds.

BRAINS

Reading Mrs. Mary Roberts Rinehart's fascinating autobiography, "My Story," I was struck by one phrase she uses, "the physical lethargy of the brain worker." I have never known a great athlete who was at the same time a great thinker, nor a person with a creative mind who excelled in any form of sport. The two attributes do not go together.

Charles P. Steinmetz, perhaps the greatest scientific mind we have ever known in America, was a tubercular hunchback. Einstein gets his exercise by playing the violin! Ædison, mentally keen at 84, never took any form of exercise in his life. Charles Dickens died comparatively young because of his notion that he could keep his brain in condition by vigorous daily physical exertion. Persons of average ability can combine physical development to "get by" in their jobs. But the person who would excel in either field must concentrate solely on the one or the other. Perhaps the best method is Mrs. Rinehart's own. She drops all mental work for long vacations on her western ranch, living and riding in the open until her bodily vigor is restored, then returning to her writing.

TAXES

The Government defict and the question of how we are to pay for the great public works program inaugurated largely to provide employment, have combined to revive interest in the subject of taxation. Two major proposals are being strongly advocated. One is an increase in inheritance taxes, the other a general sales tax. We have sales taxes now, Federal and State, on automobile sales, on gasoline on theater tickets above a certain price, on stocks, on cosmetics, cigars and cigaretts and many other commodities. Why not extend the principle to everything anybody buys? Inheritance taxes are low, espesially on large estates. Inheritance is a privilege bestowed by law, not an inherent human right. Who would be injured by a law which provided that nobody might inherit more than a million dollars, or enough to care for a dependent widow and children comfortably?

I fully expect to see much higher inheritance taxes and a more widely spread system of sales taxes generally adopted before many years.

SURPRISING FIGURES

To those who like to delve into statistics of production, commerce and the like, the actual figures often afford some odd surprises. For example, while Florida is classed among the cotton producing states, one county in Alabama grows more cotton than the entire State of Florida.

Another surprise is seen in the record of Pennsylvania's exports. The Keystone state has been established for years as a leader in the production of coal, iron and steel. But trade figures for 1930 show that Pennsylvania's principal item of export is lubricating oil, with shipments valued at $26,775,230. Bituminous coal ranks second, anthracite third, iron and steel fourth, and gasoline fifth.

The state exports more than a hundred leading products, ranging from silk and rayon hosiery and unmanafactured hair to automobiles and railway cars. Oil is on the export throne, however, due to its extensive refining interests and the fact that the state produces a large part of the famous Pennsylvania grade crude oil, the premier crude of the world.

Perhaps it is not inappropriate that oil should assume the export lead in the Keystone state, for it was the scene of the first oil drilled and produced in commercially paying quantities.

The program which the Junior Christian Endeavor put on Sunday night was enjoyed very much. We are proud of them and the interest they are taking in their work. May God help them everyone to grow strong in the service of Jesus and may we seniors and parents help and encourage them in every way possible.

Everybody that was present at the Christian Endeavor social that was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Williams last Friday night reported that they never had a better time before. The games were very good and everything went off very nicely. The refreshments were very nice and enjoyed by everyone I'm sure.

Our pastor, Bro. Headley, had a special invitation to attend, and we were glad he and his wife were with us.

Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Sheppard of Clanton spent the past week end with his mother, Mrs. C. A. Surles.

Mrs. W. W. Williams is spending a few days with her daughter, Mrs. C. H. Herod, of Haynes, this week.

Most all the Sunday school from here attended the singing at Pleasant Grove last Sunday.

We are sorry to know that Mr. W. A. Williams is on the sick list this week.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Williams and family motored to Montgomery Sunday afternoon.

We have changed our Sunday school time from 9:30 in the morning to 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon, every first Sunday afternoon, as that is our regular singing evening and it will be more convenient to have it at that time on that Sunday.

Come to the singing and bring your books and friends with you; you are always welcome.

AIDING THE FARMER

Among the many schemes which have been projected in the past few years by politicians and others in real or pretended efforts to aid the farmers of the country, very few have been of any practical benefit. In fact, some of them have been productive of more harm than good.

But there is one species of government aid, at least, which has on the whole been really helpful. It is the agricultural extension service, whereby farm and home demonstration agents, trained for their important duties, have gone among the farmers, their wives and daughters, and taught them how to help themselves.

The various field and home projects and demonstrations carried on by these faithful workers, often under the most discouraging circumstances, have materially raised the efficiency of farming and rural homemaking.

Especially effective work has been done with the boys' and girls' clubs; work which will exert a tremendous influence upon the rural life of the future. This training of farm boys and girls for community leadership is perhaps the most important activity for the betterment of agriculture today.

My Experiences in the WORLD WAR

By General John J. Pershing

CHAPTER XLI

On the heels of all the clamor for nothing but infantry and machine gunners I received a request from Marshal Haig, British commander, asking 10,000 artillerymen. This fully bore out a prediction I had cabled Washington that the allies would be asking artillerymen before long.

It will be readily understood, however, that once the allies had made a demand for infantry and machine gunners they all joined in concerted effort to bring it about regardless of what their real needs might be.

In reply, I reminded Marshal Haig that the Abbeville agreement, giving priority to infantry and machine-gun shipments, would prevent the arrival of our artillerymen for some time.

In fulfilling our part in military co-operation we had already gone far beyond the mere recognition of the principle of unity of command and had begun to bring over hundreds of thousands of men almost regardless of the organizations to which they belonged, that they might be available in the event of extreme necessity.

Inspects Second Division.

It was my custom throughout the war, as both a duty and a pleasure, to visit the troops as frequently as possible to keep in touch with the state of efficiency and the morale of officers and men. As Bundy's Second division, with Harbord and E. M. Lewis as brigade commanders, was leaving the quiet sector south of Verdun en route to the billeting and training area to finish preparation for battle, the moment was opportune to make a brief inspection. I had an opportunity to talk with a number of the officers in command of smaller units. I especially discussed the question of supply with officers charged with that duty.

I visited Harbord's brigade of marines and found those I inspected in good shape and their billets well kept. The troops of the division that were seen on the march, especially the trains, did not look so well. In an army like ours the care of animals is difficult to teach. Cruikshank's artillery looked well. The entraining at Ancemont was carried out in an orderly and systematic manner.

Building in France Used as School for Officers of the A. E. F.

General Blondlat, in whose corps the Second had been serving, spoke very highly of the troops. The favorable impression obtained of this unit was very soon to be confirmed on the battlefield, where its distinguished service was to make its name immortal.

Frequently Had Guests.

During the first few months at Chaumont I occupied quarters in the town, but later M. de Rouvre placed at my disposal his beautiful chateau some three kilometers away. My headquarters mess was limited to the few officers with whom I was most intimately associated and consisted of my personal aids, the chief of staff, and one or two others. Nearly always there were a few guests at meals invited from among the visitors, both French and American, who came to headquarters. Officers from French general headquarters were frequent guests and we were always glad to have them.

As a rule there was a ban on everything in the way of shop talk and the rule was rarely broken and then only when we had special guests seeking enlightenment or information regarding our policies and activities.

There was one subject that would always start a discussion, and that was the relative value of the different arms, each being represented by at least one officer. Harbord and I were both from the cavalry, and the cavalry member of the staff felt that he had at least a sympathetic audience. The infantry aid, however, always held his own in any discussion, as no matter how specious the arguments or perhaps the gibes at his expense we all know that without the infantry the other arms would accomplish little. The associations of such a group are never forgotten, and even a short period was enough to establish a permanent and affectionate relationship.

Staff Offices Rotated.

Rotation in office was early adopted as a principle to be applied to the staff in general, and although it was never possible fully to carry it out most of the officers of my staff got their chance at a tour with combat troops. Major Collins and Major Shallenberger, two of the aids who went with me to France, were the first to go to other duty, being replaced by Major Quekemeyer and Major Bowditch. Colonel Boyd, who joined me as aid shortly after my arrival in France, remained throughout the war.

When General Harbord's turn came his place as chief of staff was taken by General McAndrew. Several of the higher officers of the general staff had a tour with troops, not only that they might have the opportunity to serve at the front, which is every soldier's ambition, but because they would return to staff duty with a broader and more sympathetic understanding of the line officer's point of view and appreciate more fully the consideration that he deserves at the hands of the staff.

According to the plan for the rotation of officers between line and staff several others were relieved and sent to serve with troops. Among them were Col. Frank R. McCoy, secretary of the general staff, relieved by Maj. James H. Collins, and Col. W. D. Connor, assistant chief of staff G-1, relieved by Col. G. V. H. Moseley.

Morrow on Maritime Council.

Our members of the interallied maritime council were wide awake at this time in their search for additional tonnage. Dwight Morrow reported prospects of some increase, besides calling attention to tonnage that was idle or not being used to the best advantage. The immense shipment of American troops contemplated the use of all available passenger-cargo carrying ships, British, American and neutral. As very little if any space would be left in such ships for cargo, the latter class of ships was in greater demand than ever.

Meanwhile the amount of world cargo tonnage built during the preceding five months was scarcely equal to the losses, and the ships we were manufacturing had only just begun to be turned out for service. It was at once evident that the immense program of troop shipments would call for extraordinary concessions on the part of all concerned.

CHAPTER XLII

A strong German offensive opened May 27, 1918, against the French, with the famous Big Bertha firing on Paris.

The position of the First division was near Cantigny, where it had been in line nearly a month opposite the town and near the point of farthest advance of the enemy in the Amiens salient.

Although some weeks had passed since my offer of troops in the emergency, up to now none had been called upon to take part in active operations. The reason appeared to be that the allies were skeptical of the ability of any of our units to conduct an offensive. The opportunity now came, however, to remove misgivings on that score.

The French corps in which the First was serving had prepared a counterattack to be launched in the Amiens sector about the middle of May in case of another offensive by the enemy in Flanders, which, it was believed, would occur between May 15 and 20. The counterattack was to be directed due east toward the heights of Montdidier, with the advance of the First division, supported by a French division on each flank, as a preliminary move. This was to be followed in forty-eight hours by a general advance northward of the entire Third French army, which covered the front from Montdidier to Noyon.

Ammunition dumps had been filled, special trenches dug, new battery emplacements prepared for the reinforcing artillery and necessary orders issued for the counterattack, but the enemy did not put in his appearance according to the forecast.

First Seeks Better Position.

It was then decided that the First division should undertake to improve its position. The Germans on its front continued to hold the advantage of higher ground, from which they were able to inflict constant losses on our troops while suffering little damage themselves. Another reason was at this moment the morale of the allies required that American troops make their appearance in battle.

The Cantigny sector at this time was very active, with artillery fire unusually heavy, and the preparations for the attack by the First division, which had to be hastily made, were carried out under great difficulty. Many casualties occurred during the construction of jumping-off trenches, emplacements and advance command posts.

The Twenty-eighth infantry, under Col. Hanson E. Ely, designated for the assault, was reinforced by machine guns, engineers and other special units. Additional French artillery was sent to assist the artillery brigade of the division and particularly to suppress the hostile batteries attempting to interfere with the consolidation of the new position after it should be captured.

Yanks Splendid Under Fire.

On the morning of May 28, after a brief artillery preparation, the infantry advanced on a front of a mile and a quarter. The village of Cantigny and the adjacent heights were quickly taken, relatively heavy casualties were inflicted on the enemy and about 300 prisoners were captured. Our troops behaved splendidly and suffered but slight loss in the actual attack

Events developing farther east, however, were seriously to complicate the success. The German assault in force against the French along the Chemin des Dames, between Soissons and Rheims, began on the morning of the Twenty-seventh and was making dangerous headway. By the morning of the twenty-eighth the gains of the enemy were such that the French high command was compelled to relieve much of the reinforcing artillery behind the First division and transfer it to that front.

The enemy's artillery within range of Cantigny thus became superior to ours and was able to concentrate a terrific fire on the unsheltered troops in the captured position. His reaction against our troops was extremely violent and apparently he was determined at all cost to counteract the excellent effect the American success had produced upon the allies.

Under cover of heavy bombardment a series of counterattacks were made by the enemy, but our young infantrymen stood their ground and broke up every attempt to dislodge them. The regiment sustained severe casualties from the large caliber shells poured down upon it and had to be reinforced by a battalion each from the Eighteenth and Twenty-sixth regiments.

It was a matter of pride to the whole A. E. F. that the troops of this division, in their first battle, and in the unusually trying situation that followed, displayed the fortitude and courage of veterans, held their gains and denied the enemy the slightest advantage.

U. S. Troops at Chateau Thierry.

The alarming situation had caused General Petain to call on me on the 30th for American troops to be sent to the region of Chateau Thierry. The Third division (Dickman), then in training near Chaumont, being the only division within reach, besides the Second, was ordered to move north immediately. Dickman started his motorized machine-gun battalion over the road on the afternoon of May 30. The infantry and engineers entrained the same night, and the division's supply trains marched overland.

The first element to reach Chateau Thierry was the machine-gun battalion, which arrived the afternoon of May 31 and immediately went into action against the enemy, who then held the half of the town north of the Marne. By daylight on June 1 all available guns had been provided with cover and were in their positions, one company with eight guns, and another with nine guns about 500 yards to the east, guarding the approaches to the railroad bridge. From these positions they repulsed all attempts by the Germans to cross the Marne.

Meanwhile, as the infantry of the division came up on June 1 its battalions were put into line to reinforce the French from Chateau Thierry east to Dormans. The conduct of the machine-gun battalion in this operation was highly praised by General Petain in a citation issued later.

Stopped German Drive on Paris.

The Second division (Bundy) May 30 was near Chaumont-en-Vixen and was preparing to move northward the next day for concentration near Beauvais to relieve the First division at Cantigny. But its orders were changed late that night, and the division, moving by motor trucks, was rushed toward Maux, twenty miles northeast of Paris. Reaching there, the leading elements were hurried forward in the direction of Chateau Thierry. The roads were crowded with French troops and refugees. There was great confusion among the rapidly retreating French troops, many of them saying to our men that all was lost.

The initial deployment of the Second division was made by the Ninth infantry and the Sixth regiment of marines June 1, across the Paris highway at Lucy-le-Bocage, in front of Montreuil-aux-Lions, supposedly in support of two French divisions; but the French had orders to fall back through the American lines. In the early morning of June 2 the Twenty-third infantry, then on the left, was replaced by the French One Hundred Sixty-seventh division, and when reinforced by one battalion of the Fifth marines, the Fifth machine-gun battalion and some engineers, it was deployed to the right between the Sixth marines and the Ninth infantry, to fill a gap in the French line, and by June 5 the entire division became engaged.

Considering that this was its first experience in battle, this division made a splendid defense, repulsed all German attacks, and by its timely arrival effectively stopped the German advance on Paris.

Bring Relief to French Poilu.

The sudden appearance and dramatic entrance of the Second and Third divisions into the shattered and broken fighting lines and their dash and courage in battle produced a favorable effect upon the French poilu. It must have been with a decided feeling of relief that the worn and tired French army, retreating before vastly superior numbers, caught sight of Americans arriving in trucks at Meaux and marching thence on foot, hats off, hurrying eagerly forward to battle. And the Germans, who had been filled with propaganda deprecating the American effort and the quality of their training, must have been surprised and doubtless rather disconcerted by meeting strong resistance by Americans on different portions of this active battle front, especially when our troops advanced at once to meet the attack in open combat.

This defeat of the French furnished the second striking confirmation of the wisdom of training troops for open warfare.

Replies to French Criticism.

After the success of our troops we were in no mood to listen to self-appointed critics. M. Andre Tardieu called on me upon my return to Paris and undertook to point out that our staff was inefficient and offered criticisms of our organization. As this was something he could not possibly know about, I replied that he had got an entirely erroneous impression and that our staff was second to none in either ability or efficiency.

I advised him that we had quite enough of this sort of thing from the French, either military or civilian, and suggested that if his people would cease troubling themselves so much about our affairs and attend more strictly to their own we should all get along much better.

I did not fail to appreciate M. Tardieu's ability and his helpfulness on many occasions, but this constant inclination on the part of a certain element among the French to assume a superiority that did not exist then or at any later period, added to the attempts of some of them to dictate, had reached the limit.

On Living In A Small Town

There are so many reasons why people who live in small towns have a better time of it than those who live in the big cities that there isn't room to put them all down here. But one of the things that make our city cousins mad is that we small-town and country folk have so much more to say about the government of our state and of the nation than they do.

A writer in a recent issue of The American Mercury points out that one voter in Echols County, Georgia, has as much to say about the State's affairs on election day as 35 voters in Atlanta. Atlanta has 11 per cent of Georgia's population and pays 24 per cent of the ad valorem taxes, but has only 1.4 per cent of the members of the lower house of the state Legislature.

That disclosure leads the New York Times to remark that one voter in Putnam County, less than thirty miles north of the big city, has as much to say at Albany as five voters in New York itself. There are similar conditions in every state which has large cities. Chicago is always complaining that "down-state" members run the Illinois Legislature, while the constitution of the State of New York contains a provision which prevents New York City from ever having a majority in either house of the Legislature.

This condition is a survival of the original distribution of political authority according to locality and not according to population. And, on the whole, we see no reason to change it. Population has been drifting away from the farms in the past few years, but a whole lot of the drift never got any farther than the nearby country towns and villages, and now there is beginning a swing back from the big cities to the land again.

Farmers have their troubles, and so do small town business men, but they are trifling compared with the troubles of city people in times of industrial distress and unemployment. For one thing, the city dweller has to have cash in his pocket or starve. We know many good citizens who don't handle as much cash in a year as thousands of city folks spend for a month's house rent, but we haven't noticed any of them starving. And the few who have had hard luck and have had to have help from their neighbors haven't had to sacrifice their self-respect in accepting a "lift" over the temporary rough going.

As far as we can find out, the small towns of the whole United States have got along better through these past two years of depression than the big cities have done. And if there is anything really worth having in city life that we haven't got right here at home, we don't know what it is.

On the whole, perhaps, it's just as well that the cities don't run everything, so long as people have to eat and we country folk have to raise their food for them.

Supporting The Railroads

Recently officials of banks, trust companies, universities, college foundations and fire insurance, casualty, indemnity and surety companies met in New York and formed a committee to support the railroads in their petition to the Interstate Commerce Commission for a 15 per cent increase in freight rates. The committee is known as the Security Holders' Committee on the Railroad Emergency.

Farmers, shippers and others affected by the increased rate structure, if it is allowed, may retort that the woes of security holders are of no importance to them. But, in reality, the railroad situation is of first importance to all of us. There is hardly a business that does not, in one way or another, depend on the railroads for existence. Millions of Americans are employed by concerns, a large part of whose business is done through sales to the lines. When the railroads face disaster the effect of it is felt throughout the nation, and in a multitude of industries.

It is said that the 15 per cent increase will give the railroads about four per cent profit, where at present many railroads are unable to earn enough to pay fixed charges alone. It will mean that railroad progress is to continue, and that the public—farmers and manufacturers laborers and stockholders—will benefit accordingly. One can sympathize heartily with agriculture and other businesses now in a depressed state—but it should be understood that a reasonable degree of prosperity on the part of the railroads will be a mighty factor in bringing back good times to all.

"ROUND TOWN"

---by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

> "Search thy own heart; what paineth > thee in others in thyself may be."
> —J. G. Whittier.

And if you pardon my saying so, I think the above is a fine topic for a good sermon. I might pass that suggestion on to our preachers. They should not have very much trouble in finding a lot to say on a subject like that.

I want to thank those several readers of this column for their kind comments on recent paragraphs contained herein.

Just Supposing—

That Clanton had no paved streets. That about four filling stations would suspend business here. Or that about three or four more would open up for business. That you fell heir to a million dollars. That nine out of ten are not victims. That Chesterfields did not satisfy. That we had no Adams Apple for Luckies to advertise about. That Moses had not written the Ten Commandments. That the L & N Railroad did not pass through Clanton. That the bus companies had to pay all sorts of license to operate in the tsate. That Columbus had never discovered America. That Clanton did not have such a splendid reputation over the state. That we had no Prohibition Law. That Alabama passed a law prohibiting the planting of cotton next year. That the Clanton Golf Club erected a beautiful club house and accessories. That every farmer in Chilton County had a thousand dollars in cash.

All that supposin' makes me wonder—just what would happen if all that would happen.

This fellow Moses I spoke of above is the guy what started a lot o' trouble, no doubt. When he carved out the Ten Commandments on the Tablets of Stone, little did he realize just what he was starting in this country. Ever since he done that there has been an ever increasing output of laws and statutes, decisions and what have you, until now the poor lawyer, has a hard time finding his way through the maze of precedent.

But like The Specialist, I been figgering and I figger that if the Ten Commandments were observed as they should be, then there would not have to be so blamed many laws writ out for us to obey, or break, as the case may be or something.

In a little private survey I made not so long ago concerning the people who read newspapers, and the newspapers they read, I met a great big surprise when I found such a small number of the business and professional men of Clanton who read the local papers. Yes, actually there is a large number of our business men who only glance at the local papers and then lay them down. When a subject of local interest is mentioned there are many who will remark that they knew nothing about it, even when the papers played it up as a feature news story.

I have heard a lot about the errors that are found in newspapers. Most of them of course are what is referred to as typographical errors and are just overlooked. But here's some that caught me in the right mood to get one of those good laughs. I am always looking for:

"Mrs. Annie Besant, eighty-year-old theosophist leader, was confined to bed at the home of friends at Wimbledon. A severe child forced her to cancel all speaking engagements." Of course it should have been 'chill.'

"This is the first picture taken showing Europe's other famous Queen Marie with the infant Prince Andria, her third sin." And of course that should have been 'son.'

"It is proposed to use this donation to purchase new wenches for our parks as the present old ones are in very dilapidated state." — Naturally that should have been 'benches.'

Here's one from an ad—"Why rend your garments elsewhere when our up-to-date laundry can do the work more effectively."

And along comes this Mr. Lande and advertises thru the press that he has some bargains in men's and boys suits. He says that in two days time last week he sold forty suits of clothes, and at the rate he was going the latter part of last week, I'll bet he has lost trace of how many he has sold by now. My comment on this is simply, "Publicity and advertising is a fine thing when done in the right way." And Mr. Lande apparently knows how to use it with his store, The Leader. If I could have scared up a few dollars there is a bare possibility that I would have blossomed forth in a new tailor made suit, one from Lande's. But such is the life of a columnist.

I'm glad to see that the members of the Clanton Golf Club are progressing so nicely. I understand from a story in this issue that they have elected officers and adopted a constitution and some by-laws, and that interest is increasing. I'm afraid to go too much into detail about this for fear I might get the golf bugs on me, and that'll be just too bad because then I'd have to dig up a little cash and join that club if they would let me in.

A Moral For "Reformers"

Those who advocate anti-revolver and pistol laws because of the prevalence of crime are on shaky ground. The sawed-off shotgun and sub-machine gun are the modern weapons whose operation involves little skill and whose destructive power is a thousand times that of any small arm.

It is not improbably that crime flourishes today partly because so few homes and offices are protected by arms. A good many cities and states have rigid anti-gun ordinances, and in others the requirements for owning a weapon are so involved that the average citizen does not go through the necessary red tape. This is not an argument in favor of all of us going about the streets armed—but it certainly is evidence of a condition which gives potential law-breakers an advantage by making it difficult for the law-abiding citizens to protect his home or place of business.

We have done many absurd things in the name of crime prevention. We have passed liberty-restricting laws, thus giving us more laws to break. We have penalized the good citizen in the hope that this ordinance or that would miraculously cut down crime. As a result, the United States is the greatest law-breaking civilized country on earth. There is a sound moral here, if the "reformers" care to look for it.

"AS SEEN"

By John Goodloe

PLAYING THE GAME

I look good acting whether on the stage or in real life. It is an art that is essential if one rises to a higher station in life, and yet most people will disagree because they believe in one being what they are. Theoretically that sounds like good advice—but I wondtr how far most of us would get if we really played the part of our real selves. Let a man or woman start talking about their pains and aches and see how interested you become. Let them expound their financial difficulties and see how soon you start avoiding them. No one cares for your chronic troubles, regardless of the patient interest they may show to keep from hurting your feelings. Play the old game my friend—smiel and the world smiles with you, weep and some day you wil lrun into some unsympathetic soul who will give you what you deserve. Life is too short for wasting the other fellows time telling him about your troubles—he has troubles of his own—so just smile and make him think you are enjoying the best of health. I've seen men smile when in their hearts there was sadness and fear. I've seen them laugh and joke when alone they would cry. I've known women who have pushed their husbands back to fortune and fame after loss and defeat by smiling and accepting their misfortune with a courage that would make most of us look like pikers. I don't like cheap acting—I hate the fellow who wraps a ten dollar bill around stage money, and acts rich. I detest a woman who tries to appear superior to her neighbors — yet I admire the woman who crashes the gates of society above her own station in life, and sticks. Haven't you noticed men and women who could adapt themselves to people of every walk in life—who could make the poor feed comfortable in their presence—who could make the rich feel proud of having their acquaintance? I know a political boss in one of the southern states who rose to a high place in the service of the National Government through the great influence he had in theh state where the party of his faith was greatly in the minority. The explanation was that he was a wonderful actor. I've heard him talk before the laboring class with patched trousers, a blue shirt with no tie and worn out shoes, with a vocabulary that would make the King's English appear as though it had been in a slaughter house. I've seen him changed to a dress suit and speak before the highest type professional men at a banquet and employ english that would make the King look like a second-rate tin horn. Perhaps you don't like that kind of fellow—but he has friends in all classes and he has never been known to snub them. He made his acting real—he put feeling into every expression and syncronized his thoughts with those of the class before whom he was speaking. This type of acting is well worth while no matter what you are and wil lbring to you an immeasurable amount of happiness and success if in your acting you train yourself to be sincere in the part you are playing.

Demonstrations On Canning Held Here

During the past week Miss Ruth Dobyne, district home demonstration agent of Auburn, assisted by Miss Mignon Mallette, home demonstration agent of Coosa County, conducted several emergency canning demonstrations in this county in the various communities.

The demonstrations were held at some home in the communities and were attended by large numbers of the farm women in the communities, with much interest shown in the work. These meetings were arranged by County Agent Stapp and Erle Thomas, vocational teacher at Isabella, and Miss Bertha Dennis, who worked untiringly with Miss Dobyne and Miss Mallette in these demonstrations.

Meetings of instruction in this work were held at Isabella, Fairview, Vermont, Union Grove, Poplar Springs and Friendship. One hundred and twenty-one farm women attended these meetings and this work was appreciated by those present.

Principals Imply That Teachers Got Raw Deal

all other state and county officials were paid in cash for their services.

Amounts Due Vary

The amounts due the teachers for work during the last school year varies in the respective counties. In some of the counties the teachers have been paid in full. In others some teachers are holding "script" awaiting payment for services ranging from a month to four months.

With the beginning of the new school year hundreds of teachers are about to resume their work without any definite assurance as to when they will be paid for past due salaries or for salaries for the forthcoming term, it was pointed out by several at the meeting.

The situation was created by an empty treasury and large deficits when Gov. Miller entered office. Gov. Miller, in order that the teachers might be paid to January, borrowed $5,000,000, the greater part of which was disbursed to the counties. Subsequently Gov. Miller announced that the State would issue warrants to the counties for $850,000 due for the attendance fund; $900,000 for the equalization fund; about $457,000 for the rural high school fund, and several other smaller funds. The counties were authorized to borrow money on these warrants from the local banks, if possible, in order to pay the teachers and defray other expenses of school operation, maintenance, and capital outlay expenditures.

Some Paid In Full

Quite a number of the counties were able to borrow money on the warrants, and to a large measure, alleviate the situation. Other counties, however, were unsuccessful in floating any loans with the warrants as proffered securities and the teachers have been given "script" or "due bills" on the county.

The Principals also adopted resolutions thanking the officials of Womans College for the use of the chapel and dormitories of the school. Another resolution recommended that all high schools in the State adopt the uniform marking system recommended by the committee on a uniform system of marking.

Officers Elected

William M. Jackson, of Selma, was elected president of the Association.

W. J. Terry of Eclectic, the retiring president, was elected vice president and W. L. Spencer, director of secondary education for the State Department of Education, was re-elected secretary-treasurer. Mr. Terry is principal of the Elmore County High School

New members named to the executive committee are Houston Cole, of Northport, principal of the Tuscaloosa County High School, and William Tidwell, principal of the Livingston High School.

W. J. Baird, principal of the Jefferson County High School, recommended a point system for high school boys in directing a discussion of physical education and high school athletics.

Dr. J. O. Frank, of Oshkosh, Wis., recognized as an authority on science study courses, again addressed the convention on "Ways, Means and Devices to Enrich Courses in High School Sciences." Dr. Frank was a member of the faculty at the University of Alabama Summer School.

LARGE CROWDS ATTEND CHRISTIAN CHURCH REVIVAL

The Church of Christ at Clanton began a series of meetings on last Sunday with large crowds in attendance. The Methodist and Baptist Churches dispensed with their evening services and their pastors with many of the members attending the meeting. The large crowds gathered from many other places as well as from Clanton. So far there have been visitors from Birmingham, Montevallo, Calera, Jemison, Thorsby, Speigener, Maplesville, and Mt. Creek. Monday night there was one confession of faith, with baptising to take place later.

Evangelist G. A. Dunn, Jr., of Dallas, Texas, is doing the preaching. Although a youth, Mr. Dunn has traveled extensively in his work, and the Church of Christ at Clanton feels itself fortunate in being able to obtain his services. Mr. Dunn has expressed himself as being well pleased with his reception by the citizens of Clanton.

The meeting will continue throughout the week and a part of next week with services daily at 7:30 P. M. Mr. Dunn has toured the Holy Land and has made a special study of this ancient city and will lecture on it on next Monday night. The public is urged to attend every service.

Thorsby Public School Opening

Following is a statement from W. T. Bean, Principal of the Thorsby Public School, in regard to its opening:

"The Thorsby Public School will open on Monday, Sept. 7th. We hope that every pupil who expects to attend school here this session will be present for registration even if they can't attend regularly at first. All pupils taking ninth grade work are especially urged to register Monday so that we may determine whether there will be enough pupils in this grade to justify our carrying the grade.

"We are changing the opening exercises from what they have been in the past. The board of trustees have initiated an idea for the school to hold an all-day educational rally within a few weeks at which time an effort will be made to get every patron of the school out for the day. This being the plan of our get-together meeting, the patrons will not be expected to attend the opening next Monday. However, each and every patron who may wish to come will be gladly welcomed then or at any other time.

"The devotional exercises will be conducted by one of the local ministers, and G. A. Dunn, Jr., of Dallas, Texas, will lecture to the pupils, after which registration of pupils will be made.

LARGE CROWD ATTENDS COOSA-CHILTON PICNIC

The picnic held last Sunday at Log Cabin Beach was attended by a large number of people from Chilton and Coosa Counties. This was the second all-day affair of this kind that has been held at Log Cabin Beach, and everyone seemed to thoroughly enjoy the day's outing and entertainments.

Several items of interest were added to the recent picnic more than was found at the first one. Delicious barbecued meat added to the filled dinner baskets of those attending and surfboard riding added to the thrills. Those attending expressed the wish that another picnic like the last one be held again soon.

Clanton Pilot Club Sponsors Canning Program

vegetables up was under the supervision of Miss Ruth Dobyne, of Auburn, district home demonstration agent, assisted by Miss Mignon Mallette, home demonstration agent of Coosa County. These two ladies have been spending several days in Chilton County giving canning demonstrations in the various communities.

Hundreds of quarts and pints of fruits and vegetables have been canned the two days by the Pilot Club, with the aid of others who took an interest in the work. It is planned that these canned products will be turned over to the proper committee for distribution to the families of the county who will be in need of wholesome food during the coming Winter months.

When this idea was placed before the Kiwanis Club of Clanton, it was decided that this club would furnish all necessary cans and jars to be used, many of them being donated by residents of Clanton. It was necessary to purchase quite a number after it was found that the call for the donation of products was met with such interest and response from the farmers.

This movement is the first step taken by the recently organized club of business and professional women of Clanton, the Pilot Club, with Mrs. C. Stapp as president. Apparently their first step toward service to their county has met with success and hearty approval from the entire county, and was the first of its kind ever to be sponsored in this county. Although it is rather late in the season for this work to be done, it was not difficult to find a sufficient amount of products in the county to keep the workers busy for two days, many working into the night in order to get as much canned as possible before the week ended.

The Clanton Pilot Club, although young in its organization and with 30 members, has been moving forward rapidly since its organization some few months ago. The club has several objectives on program, which it is hoped will be carried out before the end of the year. The club is cooperating with the Kiwanis Club of Clanton in putting over a Clean-Up Week in Clanton which will get underway within the coming week. Among the objectives under discussion in the Pilot Club is the placing of a children's playground in Clanton, and the beautifying of the main highways leading into the town by the planting of flowers and shrubbery along the sides of the road within the city limits.

ORGANIZATION OF SUNBEAM BAND OF STATNON, ALA.

Saturday afternoon at 3:30 Miss Robert Lee Lester and Mrs. C. F. Gandy met at the church to organize a Sunbeam Band. Eighteen children met. Mrs. Gandy made a complete speech on Sunbeam work and was followed by Miss Robert Lee Lester, who made it clear, "Doing the little things of life."

After a long discussion was made officers were elected as follows: President, Master Charles E. Golson; vice-president, Lloyd Davis; secretary and treasurer, and vice-leader, Miss Robert Lee Lester; leader, Mrs. C. F. Gandy. We hope our Sunbeam Band light will shine as the sun.

Our remark: Doing the little things of life. Motto: Preparing ourself for the greater life.

We truly hope that other communities will get busy and organize a band. Those that have not one now.

Because we learn that Dr. C. B. Williams, eminent psychologist, says "Modern psychologists, from their recent investigations have fairly agreed that the first seven years of the child's life, they receive all the ideas and impressions that determine the character, life and destiny of the man or woman."

So let us try to train our chlidren the way they should go and when they are old they will not depart from it. It's true they may get out in bad company and stray awhile, and sow some wild oats. But if we keep our prayers up for them and always be loving to them some day they will come back, with more determination to carry their cross than before. So let's train our children in the way they should go.

Miss ROBERT LEE LESTER,
Secretary-Treasurer.

VERBENA, ITS HIGHLIGHTS OF ARISTOCRACY OF FORTY-ODD YEARS AGO

Verbena, Alabama, once and even now, has an air of aristocracy among its residents that has penetrated the minds of people who came in contact with its atmosphere, far and near, and this aristocratic atmosphere lingers still in the homes of the older residents of the town.

But during a period of some forty-odd years ago, Verbena held a place in this section of the state, never touched by towns of its size. Through the courtesy of Miss Frances Gulledge, a member of one of the oldest and most prominent families of the town, the News came into possession of a small newspaper, bearing a Verbena, Alabama date line of March 29, 1888. Although this newspaper was called The Verbena High School Alpha, and carried quite a bit of the school news of the now elderly residents of the town, and many who no longer reside there, it was also something of a community newspaper, well written and printed.

Following are some of the items carried in this particular issue of The Alpha of March 29, 1888:

"Mr. and Mrs. M. Barret, of Montgomery, have come up to prepare their home for summer enjoyments.

"Pratt Saw Mill Company received a car load of oxen last week.

"Mr. C. M. Williamson, of Birmingham, was visiting friends and relatives in Verbena Sunday and did not forget to subscribe for the Alpha.

"Mesdames S. T. Williamson, B. J. Baldwin, J. S. Pitts and A. J. Brooks, and Misses Julia A. Bostic, Mary Williamson and Carrie Shackelford have enjoyed the Friday evening exercises since our last issue. Come again. Students and teachers extend you a continuous invitation and hearty welcome.

"Hon. Ken Wells who has been sick most of the year is now constantly on our streets attending to business matters. While business demands the greater portion of his time, he does not forget to lend a helping hand to the proprietors of the Alpha.

"Mesdames J. C. Gibson and A. J. Brooks spent a half day last week in visiting our school, and expressed themselves as delighted with the recitations. Knowing that lessons are usually imperfectly perpared on Monday, they wisely selected that day for visiting us. The students and teachers extend you a hearty invitation to visit the School at any hour and on any day.

"When you go to Montgomery don't forget to call on Goetter, Weil & Co., as they keep one of the largest stocks of dry goods, millinery and clothing in the city and the best assortment.

"Remember that Joel White is an old friend to schools and always keeps on hand a large stock of text books and other literature. Give him a trial.

"The rain has kept our police force off duty for several nights. We hope the weather will permit them to turn out in full force this week.

"Mesdames Collier, of Clanton, and Patton, of Montgomery, were visiting Mrs. J. B. Boyakin several days last week.

"Miss Ida Scott, a beautiful young lady from Ironaton, Ala., has been visiting her uncle, Mr. O. T. Grimes.

"Mr. John Moody says that he did four weeks work last week. Ask him how he did it.

"Read the advertisement of John Smith, Verbena's barber.

"Justice court was in session Saturday, but did not have much business on hand; because our citizens are not inclined to waste money and time in the courts. . . .

"The following letter from Dr. B. J. Baldwin, of Montgomery, to the editor of the Alpha is fully appreciated:

'I have just received a copy of the Alpha. Really, I think the first copy will compare very favorably with any of the village papers in the State, and I offer the editorial staff my best wishes for the undertaking so creditably begun. Enclosed you will find my subscription for the first month.'

"The chief justice of the Supreme Court of the United States died very suddenly last week and the papers of the country are busy suggesting suitable men to fill the position. Mr. Cleveland will probably suit himself in the matter.

"Mr. J. M. Bradshaw spent Sunday in Verbena.

"If you stand in need of any drugs or anything else kept in a first class drug store, don't fail to read the advertisement of E. C. Andrew which appears in this issue of the Alpha.

"Monday's floods carried away the bridge across Chestnut Creek, at this place and several feet of the old mill dam. The rains were exceedingly heavy and great damage has been done to our farm lands in addition to the several other bridges in the county which have probably gone the way of all the world.

"The Democratic party should be organized in every state, county and village in the union and be ready to meet the enemy with organized ranks."

It was also interesting to note editorial comments from daily newspapers of Montgomery in regard to the fine work of The Alpha. Among these comments were those from The Montgomery Advertiser and The Daily Dispatch of Montgomery.

The paper had as its business manager F. B. Baldwin, and the following as publishers: F. B. Baldwin, O. J. Brooks, George Traywick, J. C. Parker, H. W. Strock, Fletcher Holmes, and Claud Boyakin.

The Verbena High School at that time had as its principal E. D. Acker, with Miss Fannie Collier, Mrs. Fannie Davis, and Miss Fanny Purifoy, as teachers. Tuition was paid monthly in advance and board was advertised as reasonable.

Among the advertisements appearing in this issue of The Alpha were those from F. A. Gulledge, general merchandise dealer, W. A. Howard, jeweler and watchmaker Pitts and Williamson, physicians and surgeons.

In next week's issue of The News, there will appear more items taken from this forty-three year old newspaper, The Alpha. During that period, it appears from this paper that Verbena was looked upon as an aristocratic summer resort.

F. F. A. Camp Of Marbury A Big Success

A great time was had by the members of the Marbury Chapter on their camp last week at Bridge Creek Hunting and Fishing Camp, thanks to a well planned program which included lots of good eats and eliminated the usual K. P. duties. The boys were able to enjoy and devote their time to swimming, boating, fishing, boxing, horse-shoe throwing, etc., including a mock trial, in which Mr. McKee of Marbury, acted as prosecuting attorney, D. E. Burns, (member) as defense attorney, Mr. Martin, agricultural teacher, as the Judge. Mr. Baker, teacher, was accused of being a "general nuisance" and found guilty.

Their program was made a complete success when they had as visitors at various times the following: Mr. Harvey Botteford, Marbury's coach for next year; Mr. and Mrs. Teal and children, (Mr. Teal, new principal of Marbury High School) Miss Helen Gilbert, teacher of Marbury, Mr. Martin, Agricultural teacher of Marbury; Mr. McKee, Marbury; Mr. L. C. Rew, County Agent; Miss Josie Barefield, Miss Nora Rogers, both of Marbury, and Mr. Baker, teacher of South Alabama.

Some very interesting after dinner speeches were made on different occasions, and the chapter as a body, wish to extend their appreciation to Mr. Teal for his sincere offer of co-operation in making this club a success in 1932, also Mr. Botteford for the splendid program he outlined along athletic lines and Mr. Martin, who has made this club a success by his keen interest and cooperation. Other helpful and interesting talks were made by Mr. Baker, Mr. Rew and Mr. McKee.

During camp there was much quick repartee and fun between Mr. Baker and Mr. McKee which caused much merriment. A good time was had by all, including the discussion of plans for next years activities. So succe ful was this camp that they hope make it an annual event. They wish thank Mr. Gaines, overseer of Club,

Clanton Methodist Church

D. W. Haskew, Pastor

At the 11 o'clock service next Sunday we will have the holy Communion. We spread the elements on the Lord's table, and your portion will be there. Come and bow yourself in humility and have fellowship with your Lord about his table.

Preaching at 11 A. M. and at 7:30 P. M. by the pastor.

We welcome Mr. J. O. Ray into our church from the First Methodist church in Anniston, Alabama.

Our Sunday school climbed over its previous record again last Sunday. Let all who were there last Sunday be present next Sunday and bring some one with you. The Sunday school spirit is lower at Clanton than in any other place where I have ever served. We need a Sunday school consciousness. Make yourself into one who will help to take this reputation from our City. Our churches are not play things. We are dealing with the matter of eternal life, and we should make the church the thing of first importance.

ROUGH RIDER MYTH

Probably 99 persons out of 100 who have read or heard of the famous Roosevelt's Rough Riders of the Spanish-American War believe that those ambitious troopers charged up San Juan Hill on horseback, booted and spurred, sabers waving in the air.

A writer in a recent magazine graphically portrayed their exploit as that of "500 men on horseback standing in their stirrups and galloping, shouting to one another like polo players."

The truth is that the Rough Riders marched and fought on foot in Cuba, as did other Calvary regiments, their horses having been left behind when they sailed from the United States.

Due to Roosevelt's vivid personality and the large amount of publicity given the regiment by New York newspapermen, the Rough Riders received the lion's share of credit for the victory at Santiago, a share rather greater than was their just due.

That they were brave men and good fighters none will deny, but they were in that respect no different from other troops, some of whom received scant attention in the dispatches. The Rough Riders did no riding, rough or otherwise, in Cuba.

Farmers Prepare To Plant Legumes

Alabama farmers are making good progress with their plans for planting seed of Austrian peas and hairy vetch this fall, according to reports received from the county agents by District Agents J. T. High, R. G. Arnolds, and Emmett Sizemore at Auburn.

They are placing orders for seed and basic slag with which to fertilize, because basic slag is recommended by the Experiment Station at Auburn. They are also making their plans to plant the seed in late September or early October.

Several large shipments of seed have been bought by the Alabama Farm Bureau Mutual Supply Association from Oregon farmers for distribution among Alabama farmers. Harvesting and shipping of these seed were supervised by C. L. Hollingsworth, county agent for Clarke County.

Planting of these seed this fall will be done primarily for soil improvement next year. Experience has demonstrated that improving land this way is better and cheaper than buying fertilizer. Big yields of cotton, corn, and other crops are now being made in Alabama where winter legumes were plowed under last spring.

In addition winter legumes are used for grazing and also for making hay when planted in combination with oats.

Inadequate funds with which to buy the seed and fertilizer is the only barrier to planting of a very large acreage of winter legumes in Alabama this year. Even with this handicap it is hoped that the acreage planted will be larger than that planted in any other year.

OFFENSIVE SIGNS

In keeping with what is becoming a world-wide protest against offensive signs and billboards, the authorities of Paris have decreed that no signs shall be displayed on its famous thoroughfare, the Champs Elysees, which advertise any goods not actually sold on the premises.

Recently protests were heard in Spain concerning objectionable American billboards which mar the landscape. In this country the women's clubs and other organizations are waging a campaign against the billboard nuisance.

By their erection of signboards which spoil the natural scenery along the highways, and by their encroachments in residential sections of our cities, the billboard people have brought upon themselves the just resentment of that section of the public which has regard for appearances.

When we become more civilized the billboard will go the way of the town crier.. As an advertising medium it is an anachronism already.

PRODUCE SHIPMENTS

It is somewhat surprising to know how wide is the territory from which large cities of the country draw their food supplies, particularly vegetables. A few illustrations will show how the expense of transportation must greatly increase the price of farm and garden products to the ultimate consumer.

White potatoes are shipped to Chicago from no less than 37 states, to Indianapolis from 33, to Cleveland from 32 and to Birmingham from 31 states.

Practically all the larger cities of the middle west receive potatoes from more than 20 states, some being shipped by rail a distance of 2,500 miles.

New York receives apples from 23 states, the maximum haul being 3,150 miles; potatoes from 21 states, lettuce, cantaloupes and onions from 17, tomatoes and peaches from 13.

Chicago's apple supply comes from 25 states, cabbage from 23, onions from 20, peaches from 19, tomatoes from 17, strawberries and sweet potatoes from 16 and cantaloupes from 14.

While the long haul of early vegetables is due largely to the varying climate of different sections of the country, it seems that a system of marketing might be developed which would eliminate a considerable part of the transportation charges involved in getting these products to the consumer.

IS THE SCHOOL READY FOR YOUR CHILD?

By Dr. Christmas Seal

The lines that follow were used two years ago, and they apply just as well in 1931 as they did in 1929.

If September is the month in which parents should have their children ready for school, it is also the month in which someone should have the school ready for your children. Go over to your school to see if the trustees have done their duty. Are the toilets clean and sanitary? Is the water supply safe? Is there plenty of light in the schoolroom and is it admitted in such a way that it does not strike back into the eyes of the children as they work? Are the blackboards in good condition so that work shows up well? Are the walls finished in some light shade that is neither hard on the eyes or the spirits of the children?

The Alabama Tuberculosis Association suggests that if parents, will personally look into these things there will be more happiness and less illness in the school year.

IN MEMORY OF CLIFTON CRANE WHO DIED SEPTEMBER 1, 1930

Do not ask if we miss him, there is such a vacant place.
Yet softly through the gloaming, I whisper;
Father, thy will be done, not mine.
He left us broken hearted. Friends may think the wound is healed,
But they little know the sorrow that is in our hearts concealed.
Watch for me, dear brother, you will meet me some day on that golden shore,
When shadows fade, mists clear away,
And sad farewells are known no more.

Bringing a shock to countless friends over the state, Arthur Dewey Huett, died in a Birmingham hospital last Friday morning early following an operation. He is known throughout this and other counties for his untiring work in church affairs.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Huett, born April 24th, 1906, in the Enterprise community. His early schooling was at Enterprise and he was a noble minded boy who won the lasting affection of teachers and schoolmates. He was married the latter part of January, 1923, to Miss Effie Hand. Later when he felt the call to the ministry he surrendered his life and put his whole soul into his work for the Master. About this time he entered high school at Clanton. After finishing there he entered Howard College. Here, as in his early school days, he won the love and esteem of everyone.

He leaves to mourn his loss, a loving faithful wife, and little daughter, Lorene, six years of age; his father and mother, three brothers and five sisters. The brothers are F. J. Huett of Kansas City, Mo., I. D. Huett of Coopers, and Marvin Huett of Enterprise. The sisters are Mrs. J. W. Cagle of Mitchell Dam, Mrs. O. J. Eiland of Montgomery, Mrs. A. L. Patterson of Ensley, Mrs. R. C. Morris of near Verbena, and Mrs. Clarence Billingsley of Enterprise.

He would have finished his college work in the next year had he lived. He was ambitious, eager always to please his Maker, and was devoted to his wife, and baby, mother, father and all relatives and friends.

Misbranded Seed Swindle Has Been Remedied

asking them for the names and addresses of the dweller and shipper of the beans, analysis tag from the bag in which the beans were shipped, samples of the beans where available and other information. We are asking for this information in order to cooperate with the Federal authorities in bringing suit against out-of-state shippers who have shipped misbranded seed into the State.

"It is our desire that every farmer who purchased misbranded seed be refunded for his losses and that the shipper be duly punished. The farmer has recourse on the dealer from whom he purchased the beans and the dealer has recourse to the shipper of the beans into the State.

"All farmers who did not get the kind of seed purchased are urged to take it up with their county agents."

Commissioner Storrs and Mr. Allen have also written seed dealers advising that all seed not bearing an analysis as required by law will be removed from sale subject to confiscation. The letter sent to dealers reads:

"We have found that certain shippers of seed from out of this State do not place an analysis tag on each bag of seed as required by law. We have taken the matter up with them and they still refuse to comply with the requirements of the seed law.

"This letter is to advise you that in the future all seeds not bearing an analysis as required will be removed from sale subject to confiscation when found by the seed inspectors. In order to prevent this happening to you require that all seed sold to you be tagged with a correct analysis as required by the Alabama law."

Prof. Warr Points Out Several Important Items

There are a number of items to be considered in the term, readiness. Have you talked with your child and impressed upon him the importance of a high school education? Have you tried to point out to him that it pays to be educated? Are you holding before him the goal of a high school diploma? Will you see that he has his books, his pencils, his tablets, and other necessary equipment for carrying on his work to the best of his ability? If you do not attend to these matters, then your child will begin his school year handicapped, and at a great disadvantage.

Please see that your boy or girl comes to school on Monday morning ready to pay his incidental fee. It is very necessary that these fees be paid. There are many things to be supplied in connection with running a school besides the money which the State promises to pay teachers. I feel that it i not necessary at this time to expla in detail the expenditure of incident fees, but I assure you that the recor are open at all times for inspection an that every penny is most wisely an economically spent. Please do not em barrass your child and his teachers b sending him to school next week wit out his incidental fees.

Let's all join in making this a happ and profitable year for the children o our community.

Mulberry Farmers Turn To Berry Growing

STRAWBERRY ASSOCIATION IS ORGANIZED

Mulberry Valley Truckers Is To Be Name of New Organization In County

Bringing to a finer point some activities of the Clanton Kiwanis Club, and efforts of County Agent C. E. Stapp and others interested in the matter, a new strawberry growers association has been formed in Chilton County.

This new organization is the Mulberry Valley Truckers Association and became fully organized last Saturday, September 5th, at a meeting held in Maplesville, attended by a large number of farmers and business men of the western part of the county. The purpose of this organization is to promote the growing and shipping of strawberries throughout the section of the Mulberry Community, Maplesville, etc.

This organization is the outcome of a meeting sponsored by the Clanton Kiwanis Club at Maplesville some time ago, when the club had as its guests approximately eighty farmers, business and professional men of Maplesville and surrounding communities. At this meeting the value of planting and shipping strawberries cooperatively was brought out, and with the help of County Agent Stapp, Earle Thomas and many others, much interest was aroused in that section along this line.

Other meetings have been held in Maplesville to promote this program and the Mulberry Valley Truckers Association is the first organization of its kind ever to be formed in that section. Indications are that the association will be a success. Something like eighty men have become members of the organization already and approximately one hundred acres of land has been pledged to strawberry planting next season, with the shipping point at Maplesville.

Officers of the association were elected with J. P. Payne, hardware merchant and planter of Maplesville as Secretary-Treasurer, and a board of directors of five men was named. From this board of directors, a president and vice-president will be selected and named later.

LOCAL SCHOOLS HAVE SPLENDID OPENING DAY

Largest Attendance for First Day Reported By Many County Schools

Last Monday was a history making day for those long term schools which opened in Chilton County, according to reports coming in from the principals of the schools.

The schools reported that the enrollment for the first day of the term this year exceeded in many instances any previous year, and the outlook for a successful term is most promising. Incidental fees have been paid very well at all schools it is reported.

No definite figure of enrollment has been received from all the schools opening Monday. The Chitlon County High School reported Tuesday an enrollment of 238 for the first day, and over 250 are expected shortly. Prof. Warr, principal, stated that this is the largest enrollment seen since he has been principal of the school, which has been several years.

The Clanton Grammar School reports an enrollment Monday of 253, and twelve more on Tuesday of this week, with incidentals being paid nicely. In former years incidental fees for grammar school pupils have been paid at Alred Drug Company, but this year they are being paid to Prof. I. J. Quinn, principal.

LOCAL LEGION WILL COMBAT RED ACTIVITIES

Department of Americanism Established to Help Preserve Sacred Institutions

A timely movement has been inaugurated by the American Legion of Alabama to combat and stem the tide of communist activities now surging in the State of Alabama. The Legion regards it as a matter of serious concern to take prompt and deliberate action and cooperate with local civil authorities to apply appropriate corrective measures. The American Legion will keep a constant eye open for all un-American propaganda and its influences.

At the meeting of Chilton County Post No. 6 Monday night, this matter was taken up in its local application to our county, and proper steps were taken to perfect a local Americanism organization under the direction of officials of the local post.

A committee was appointed to have charge of this program, and it was indicated that extreme vigilance will be maintained to apprehend any communist activities and have such activities brought to the attention of local law enforcement authorities.

Movements of any kind contrary to the fundamental ideals and principles of Americanism will meet the prompt and rigid measures that characterize the attitude of the American Legion toward such movements.

SCHOOL TERM QUESTION IS SETTLED HERE

Opening Dates Set; Meeting Of Trustees Held On Last Thursday

Apparently the question that has created quite a bit of concern over the county recently, concerning the opening date of the schools here has been settled. This became known following a meeting held last Thursday at the courthouse for trustees for the purpose of discussiing the opening.

The meeting was well attended, not only by school trustees, but by others who were interested in the matter. J. Mell Martin was elected as chairman of the meeting. A division was made separating trustees of long term schools from trustees of the short term schools. A motion was made that the long term schools open on September 7th which was last Monday, as heretofore set out. This motion was seconded, and when a vote of trustees was taken, it was carried.

Trustees of the short term schools were then given an opportunity to discuss their question. A motion was made that all short term schools of the county open on October fifth as heretofore set out. The motion was seconded and carried by vote.

Due to considerable discussion over the county, and suggestions that the opening of the schools be postponed on account of cotton picking, this meeting was called in order that the question could be settled among the trustees of the schools of the county, and the definite opening dates were set.

NIGHT SCHOOL AT PROVIDENCE

Prof. J. P. Montgomtry, vocational teacher at Jemison High School, stated Monday that he has already started off a night school for farmers at Providence, Beat 12. The first meeting was held last Thursday night with about forty farmers in attendance. The actual enrollment the first night was 22.

The school will be continued with meetings each week on Tuesday and Friday nights. Mr. Montgomery is very much pleased with the interest shown by the people of Providence community, and has hopes that this school will prove of special benefit.

The home economics teacher at Jemison, Miss Newell, expects to enlist the ladies of Providence community in a night school for teaching subjects of interest to housewives.

According to an announcement from E. C. Evans, district manager, the next meeting of the Woodmen of the World in Clanton will be a most interesting one. Mr. And Mrs. Hugh Foshee Pass Fifty-Seventh Year Of A Tranquil And Happy Married Life

Fifty-seven years ago, last Monday, September 7th, Mr. Hugh Foshee took Miss Mary Marzell Jones, of Swift Creek, Ark., as his young bride. This occurred on Monday morning, September 7th, 1874, a little later than eleven o'clock.

A most interesting and colorful story is the life of this happy and popular couple of Clanton during the time since their marriage fifty-seven years ago. Through these many years of a happy life together, Mr. and Mrs. Foshee have had their many ups and downs, all of which go to make the story more interesting.

Mr. Foshee is a native of Chilton County, reared out in the Mulberry settlement, but stayed for awhile, when a young man, in Arkansas, where he met Mrs. Foshee, and their courtship blossomed forth. After they were married, they moved to Alabama, and in 1874, on October 15th, they located in Lomax, where Mr. Foshee had secured a job as bookkeeper with a saw mill. In January 1877, they moved to Clanton, and Mr. Foshee served this county as Clerk of the Circuit Court.

Mr. Foshee's story of his married life will take a person back to the days when there were no automobiles, and when he took the young lady on horseback to the minister to be married to her, and how they traveled many miles on horseback to reach a railroad, on their way to Alabama where they were to start life in a new place. The story will unfold a few hardships this couple encountered during their early married life, and how they started housekeeping with a cow, a chair, a bed, a few cooking utensils, and only a few other small articles, in a small home. That of course was in the days when only a few homes had glass windows, and hinges on doors. The home at that time of Mr. and Mrs. Foshee had sliding doors and windows.

The News joins the many friends of this happy elderly and popular couple of Clanton in congratulating them on their fifty-seventh wedding anniversary.

3 TENTS ARE DESTROYED AT CAMP MEETING

Woman Asleep in Tent While Flames Burn Canvas Around Her

Three small tents were completely destroyed by fire, and many others endangered last Sunday at the camp meeting of the Seventh Day Adventists which has been going on in Verbena for several days and which ended last Saturday.

The tents are said to have become ignited from a small fire built in one of the tents by some small children. Quick action on the part of persons nearby, when the fire was discovered probably saved many of the other tents, when they cut the ropes of other tents, causing them to fall to the ground.

In one of the tents destroyed a woman was sleeping, and although difficult to awaken, she left the flaming canvas just as it became a mass of flames.

The tents were occupied by visiting Adventists attending the camp meeting. Contents of one of the tents were saved, it was stated, while the contents of the other two were a total loss.

Night School At Vermont Is Fine

Quite a good deal of splendid work has been done at the night school for farmers and their wives, which is being conducted at Vermont, in the western part of the county. This school is being conducted by Erle Thomas, and Miss Bertha Dennis. Mr. Thomas takes care of the agriculture end while Miss Dennis gives instructions to the ladies on preserving and other home work.

The school meets each Monday, Wednesday and Friday night and will continue for about another week. Attendance has been extremely pleasing, and those who are attending express themselves as being appreciative of the work being done there.

FUNERAL SERVICES FOR ARLENE SANFORD MONDAY

Funeral services for Miss Arlene Sanford, age 19, who died at her home here last Sunday, were held at the home Monday morning at 11 o'clock, with Dr. S. J. Ezell, pastor of the Baptist church and Dr. D. W. Haskew, pastor of the Methodist church, officiating. Interment took place at the cemetery near Jemison.

The deceased was a popular member of the group of young people in her neighborhood, and her sudden death brought grief to many hearts, young and old. She is the daughter of W. L. Sanford, one of Clanton's oldest and widely known barbers.

She is survived by her father, and several brothers and sisters. At the funeral of this young girl, the many persons present and the beautiful floral offerings showed that she will be greatly missed.

PEOPLES SAVINGS BANK GIVES LOVING CUP TO SCHOOLS

The Peoples Savings Bank of Clanton had as a prize for the school showing the highest average attendance during 1930-31, a beautiful silver loving cup. Every school in the county was considered in this, and the cup was awarded to the Chilton County High School, whose average attendance for the recent term of school was 94.53.

This step on the part of The Peoples Savings Bank is to be commended, as much interest was shown in this prize.

PLAN IS FOR PROHIBITING 1932 COTTON

Meeting Here Next Saturday Requested By Member Of Plan In Alabama

Falling in line with many other places, where meetings to discuss the considering of the Long Plan on the cotton situation, Chilton County will hold a meeting in Clanton on next Saturday, September 12, for this purpose.

Much activity is being seen all over the country in regard to the Long Cotton Plan, originated by Governor Hughey P. Long, of Louisiana who has succeeded in getting the approval of his state on the plan

The Long Plan is to prohibit the planting of cotton in 1932, with the hope that this will cause the price of the product to increase, provided the plan is adopted officially in a sufficient number of the larger cotton producing states.

In a statement from Judge L. H. Reynolds of Chilton County, the meeting to be held here has been requested by a member of the Long Cotton Plan in Alabama. Following is the statement from Judge Reynolds:

"I have been requested by Hon. J. B. Barnett, a member of the Long Cotton Plan in Alabama, to get the sentiment of the people of the county interested in growing or selling cotton.

"You are, therefore, hereby notified to meet at the Court House on next Saturday, September 12, 1931, at two o'clock P. M. for the purpose of expressing yourselves as to whether or not the Legislature of Alabama shall be called together in special session for the purpose of recommending or passing some resolutions that would help the cotton situation.

"The Long Plan, if adopted, will prevent the growing of cotton next year and I especially urge all banks, persons holding mortgages on cotton and others interested in cotton growing to attend this meeting."

J. R. HARDY TO BE NEW CHIEF OF POLICE HERE

Will Succeed J.A. Boockholdt Who Has Been On Force For Several Years

J. R. Hardy will become day policeman and chief of Police here after September 15th, according to an announcement from the office of the Mayor here last week.

This announcement followed the action of the Mayor and City Councilmen at a special meeting held on Wednesday, September 2. A general shakeup has occurred in the police force of Clanton during recent weeks. C. A. "Red" Sherrod, who has been on duty here for some time as night police was succeeded by W. B. Foshee several weeks ago, at which time, it is stated, a change was contemplated in the day force.

Mr. Hardy who is well and favorably known throughout the county is a man who is fully capable of handling the responsibility of the place he is to fill. He has had quite a bit of experience in the law enforcing line while a resident of Coosa County, and at various times has served on the police force here. Mr. Hardy is a resident of Clanton. He will succeed John A. Boockholdt as Chief of Police, whose resignation will take effect Sept. 15, it was stated.

Mr. Boockholdt has served the town of Clanton for a number of years as policeman, serving under the administration of three mayors. During his time as chief he has made countless friends for his manner of reasoning with law breakers.

Soybeans furnish good pasture in late summer and early fall when perennial pastures are short.

Hints on organizing, arranging, and judging exhibits and shows of fruits, vegetables, and flowers are given in Miscellaneous Publication 85-MP of the U. S. Department of Agriculture—Horticultural Exhibitions. This can be obtained from the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. It suggests different kinds of spring and fall shows and tells how to manage them.

Good pasture is more valuable than grain as extra feed for flushing ewes at breeding time, the U. S. Department of Agriculture has found. At the department's experiment farm at Beltsville, Md., this year, ewes on good pasture produced an average of 160 lambs per 100 eyts; ewes flushed with grain produced 141 lambs per 100 ewes, and those that were not flushed produced only 116 lambs per 100 ewes.

A modern little carrier is a paying investment for the dairy barn. It saves labor because it holds much more than a wheelbarrow, less effort is needed to move it, and its tight tub prevents the dripping of liquid. For a stable with a low ceiling, the dairyman can buy a carrier consisting of a tub mounted on wheels and arranged for attaching to a track conveyor and hoist at the door.

Many light-frame farm buildings develop sway-backed roofs, bulging walls, or sagging floors, or they may lean over or collapse completely because they are not properly built in the first place. Most failures of farm buildings are caused by improper foundations, insufficient anchorage of the frame to the foundations, or insufficient bracing of the frame. You can get a 6-page leaflet on Bracing Farm Buildings, Leaflet 77-L, from the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

The quantity of feed a laying hen eats varies widely. A hen will eat more of one kind of feed than of another. A big hen eats more than a little one. A layer has to eat more than a loafer. Hens will usually eat more of a mixed-grain ration than of a ration made up of only one grain. Leghorns and similar small breeds eat less than birds of the larger breeds. Usually birds bred for high egg production consume slightly less feed than birds of the same size of less productive strains. Records at agricultural experiment stations show that Leghorns laying an average of 150 eggs a year consume about 80 pounds of grain annually, and that general purpose breeds with the same production eat about 87 pounds. Hens usually eat more grain during seasons of heavy egg production.

The quality of tea going into America's teapot is good. Of about 87,000,000 pounds imported in the fiscal year 1931, only 49,253 pounds were rejected for failure to meet the standards of the Federal tea act.

Too Much ACID

MANY people, two hours after eating, suffer indigestion as they call it. It is usually excess acid. Correct it with an alkali. The best way, the quick, harmless and efficient way, is Phillips Milk of Magnesia. It has remained for 50 years the standard with physicians. One spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in stomach acids, and at once. The symptoms disappear in five minutes.

You will never use crude methods when you know this better method. And you will never suffer from excess acid when you prove out this easy relief.

Get genuine Phillips Milk of Magnesia, the kind that physicians have prescribed for over 50 years in correcting excess acids. 25c and 50c a bottle—any drugstore.

"Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips Chemical Company and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

SOME MISSIONARY EXPERIENCES

Acts 14:8-23

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D.D.

From Antioch in Pisidia Paul and Barnabas went to Iconium and the experiences at the previous station were repeated. At first there was marked interest on the part of both Jews and Greeks. All too soon jealiusy again led to serious persecutions and the evangelists were forced to go further in carrying on their work of evangelizing. Let it be noted that at no time did the troubles they met cause them to abandon their programs

Lystra was the next place for work. Here preaching seems to have been in the open and the usual crowd of cripples and beggars were part of the audience. Interest centers in a man who had been a cripple from birth. As Paul told of the power to heal on the part of this Messiah, who had been crucified and risen from the dead, the helpless man saw the first gleam of hope that had appeared thus far on his horizon of life. His eagerness and faith were evidenced in his face, which when Paul noted brought forth the amazing command "Stand upright on thy feet." Forthwith there was a leaping into fullness of physical strength and soundness of body.

The townspeople could explain the result only by thinking that their gods had come among them. They called Barnabas Jupiter, and Paul was named Mercury. Tradition says that Paul was baldheaded, short bowlegged and had bad eyes. It was Barnabas who must have been fine in stature to be taken for their chief god. At once the priests of these supposed gods planned to offer a sacrifice and oxen were brought for the purpose. Paul would not accept any false praise and it was only with difficulty that he made them accept the fact that he was just an ordinary man, but with a message that told about the only God, and His Son their Saviour.

MOTHER OF MONARCHS

When in 1764 Lettitia Ramolino, a rather obscure Corsican girl, married Carlos Bonaparte, an assessor, at the age of 14, there was little in the occurrence to indicate the far-reaching influence that was to follow their union.

It was not particularly strange that 13 children were to be born to them, but it is remarkable that of the 13, four were destined to become emperors or kings and two to become queens.

The most famous, of course, was Napoleon Bonaparte, who became emperor of France, an whose name fills more pages of history than that of any other mortal who ever lived. He was the second child.

Joseph, the eldest, became king of Spain; Jerome was king of Westphalia, and Louis was king of Holland. Of the daughters, Maria became queen of of Naples, and Elisa bcame queen of Toscana.

Two other children held lesser rank, Lucien becoming prince of Canino, and Marie Pauline becoming duchess of Guastalla.

Thus Lettitia Ramolino has become known to the world as "the mother of monarchs." It might be imagined, therefore, that hers was a happy life—but not so. She was often poverty-stricken, and lived to see all her royal children shorn of their power. When she died at the age of 86, the great Napoleon had been dead 15 years; all her other children had lost their royal

What Would These Crops Be Worth Without Railroads?

In this issue of the News, there is an attractive ad of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, with the above heading. There is some good common sense to this advertisement—or should it even be called an advertisement, when it points out some items worth the consideration of any thinking business man. Find this railroad ad elsewhere in this issue, read it and give it some consideration. "The railroads deserve your patronage. They built this nation and continue to be the backbone of its transportation system. The steam railroads are appealing to the fairness of the American people. * * * "

o-o-o

The Real Object

Today the average person pays $5.25 annually for domestic electricity. That same average person pays $16.00 annually for tobacco The composite figure for cost of living is still 50 per cent above 1913 figure. The average cost of domestic electricity is 31 per cent below the 1913 standard.

Electricity accounts for around 2 per cent of the average household budget, and if cost of service was reduced 10 per cent it would mean less than one cent a day to the average American household. It is such a fact as this that illustrates, better than any argument, the futility—not to say absurdity—of the current political attack on the electric industry's rates. It reminds one of the political statement that American families in a given year were overcharged many hundreds of millions of dollars for electric service—and then upon investigation it was found that the sum mentioned was about equal to the nation's total domestic electric bill!

It should be obvious by now that the harpooning of the electric industry has one real object—to put the government into business, to the destruction of our fundamental American principle of governing. The cost of power is really not an issue. Certain politicians want more authority, more bureaucracy, more political patronage to peddle—and the American people will have to decide whether they will curb private initiative and enterprise which has given this nation its outstanding development, in favor of political enterprise which in business has had a long record of failures and created staggering tax burdens.

What's The Remedy

"Hoover Prosperity" has failed to prosper, and we are all agreed on the fact that the country is in a bad way. Everyone has ample opportunity to have his say about what the trouble is and what the remedy is. So, we take our pen in hand and cut loose—we don't know any more about what the trouble is nor the remedy than the average fellow, and since everybody else is busy putting over his own ideas, we're not likely to be taken seriously, if at all.

In our modest opinion, we're all expecting prosperity to come back to us, like the prodigal son. We're not sure just how it got away, but statisticians tell us that periods of prosperity last, on an average, so many months or years, we don't remember, so we look at the calendar and figure that prosperous times will be here in Juvember. Candidates promise us prosperity from a governmental source, and we expect them to live up to them all. Politicians politic and we wait for their plans to spread a great flood of prosperity over the land. Business leaders tell us that good times are just around the corner, and we wonder why they don't come on.

Well, we say, that prosperity got away from us like a scared rabbit, and it's not coming back till we go out, and by the use of all our skill and ingenuity, set a trap that will bind the wanderer hand and feet. Prosperity may be just around the corner, but it's up to us to go around that corner. We're looking for action in the wrong direction—it's our move—and if good times come silently in the night, it's up to us to be out in the field ready to lay hold of the vagabond—lest he vanish with the morning dew.

A Bedtime Story

Once upon a time a great country, far across the seas, thought to abolish crime by providing the death penalty for a multiplicity of minor crimes. But juries and judges refused to find the guilty person guilty, because of the heaviness of the penalty. And once upon another time a great country, but not across the seas, sought to make all its people good, by passing many laws to that effect. All the wise men and women and all the reformers were called in, and for each form of misconduct a law was passed to stop it. But the policemen were too few, and the jails were too small, to handle all the criminals, and besides that, all the people closed up their mouths and refused to report evidence, because they were afraid that they had broken a law yesterday or the day before and might be put in jail, too. So, the villians grew rich and prosperous, for they knew the good people were criminals too, and there was great distress in the land, until a little mouse came along and gnawed up most of the law books, leaving only two or three, and made her a nice warm bed down under the coal pile, and then there was peace and happiness everywhere.

"ROUND TOWN"

---by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

"Very awkward—for the coo," said the inventor of the locomotive to parliament, once.

It is said to have happened back yonder in the year 1825 when George Stephenson, inventor of the locomotive was trying to get assistance in building the first railroad, and a cow stopped it. Can you imagine it? Here's the way it is said to have been: There was a bill in the House of Parliament allowing the construction of a railroad from Liverpool to Manchester, and a member of Parliament asked, "Suppose now, one of these engines to be going along a railroad at the rate of nine or ten miles an hour and a cow were to stray upon the line and get in the way of the engine; would not that be a very awkward circumstance " Stephenson, speaking as he did, replied, "Very awkward—for the coo." And fear that the machine could not be stopped caused the failure of the Bill to pass.

I was just thinking the other day of the many advantages of reading the Chilton County News. I don't mind helping the boys out a bit by advertising them. Each week there are three invitations from the leading cafes on the following Sunday as guests. Now that simply means when you are invited, to either Matt's Place, The Dixie Cafe or DeWitt's Cafe, that you go there and a table has been reserved for you and you enjoy a wonderful meal and it don't cost you one cent. These invitations are always stuck off in some corner on some page of the News each week, and each invitation has the name of two people usually. Look them up, because you may be the fortunate ones.

If you pay, say, a dollar and a half for a year's subscription to the News, or even seventy-five cents, or if you are a reader of the News, you are liable to receive one of these invitations, which means you get a big, well prepared meal worth a dollar or more. These invitations are to dine at the lunch hour.

What is the idea of the schools opening so early in the morning, I wonder. It may be a good idea and it may not, I'm not saying, but right now I can't see any advantage to it. They say it is to let the children go home so they can pick cotton. Well, that means they have to get up extremely early, check out hurriedly to school, by seven o'clock, get out in the heat of the afternoon during these hot days, and get out in the fields and pick cotton during the hottest time of day.

Now wouldn't it be better to open school, say about eight-thirty in the morning, or later, and turn out later? This would enable the children to get up early, get out in the fields and pick cotton while it is cool, aiding them to have a clear mind at school. Then when they get out later, they could also pick cotton after the sun had ceased casting its hottest rays. And besides, what child would like to study at home at night after picking cotton all the afternoon. And how many children in the grammar school, old enough to pick much cotton anyway? I may be all wet about this, and I might not be, I ain't saying which.

Now here comes this long Long Cotton Plan off here in our county. That might be a good idea if all the big cotton producing states would adopt it. We'll see what the people of this county think about it next Saturday.

I understand that a man here in town misunderstood one of my paragraphs the other week, when I was trying to help him out, he thought I was trying to help him in. But I realize now that he did not know that there was a third business of his kind contemplating opening in Clanton and I just don't think there was room for three of the same kind in Clanton. He didn't realize either that this other man even came here and tried to rent a building to go into business, the same kind he's in, and the fellow he tried to rent from, told him the situation.

Gosh, but there's a lot of news circulating round this man's town that I would like to print if I was a newspaperman and didn't give a rap. I sympathize with these editors.

Frank James was complaining Tuesday of a hurting in his left shoulder. He must have put too much emphasis on a word on a sign, or one of those camels he gets. camel hair from might have kicked him or bit him, or something, or there is a possibility that a golf bug bit him. I hear those bugs are getting bad around here. In fact I understand that Red Wagoner was severely bit not long ago by a golf bug. I've never seen one, but I just imagine they are ferocious.

I notice that there is an insurance policy now available to newspapers against loss by libel suits. Maybe I better get one of these policies.

Also note that Reed Mullins has been rather busy lately getting a concrete floor in a building on Main Street and fixing the place up for the new funeral establishment of Clanton, the Spigener Funeral Home. When finished, the new place for this business will be attractive. Mr. Mullins says it ought to be ready in a day or so.

Gotta get out now and look up some of our fair school teachers, cause I'm going to need a little material for various uses now and then, later on, or sooner, or something.

I've got to ramble off down to South Clanton one day right away and see what's going on down there. Van Smith has been keeping quiet lately and there's Reuben Lowe down there, too. I'll just go down and see about those two fellows and what they been doing lately.

Letters To The Editor

J. H. JACKSON GIVES SOME BIBLE FIGURES AND QUOTATIONS

Editor News:

Will you please permit me to say a few words through your good paper? What I say I want to say it for the comfort and consolation of the oppressed, and to the people who desire a righteous rule, and free from oppression. I, for one, am tired of Mrs. Babylon's rule. Our political and religious and commercial system has become a great city. It is called by John the City of Babylon. He says it is inhabited by devils. It is also a city of speculation and a house of merchandise. Now for fear I may hurt someone's feeling, in regard to the devil I find by reading the Bible that the devil is no larger than a man, and hell is no larger than man makes it, and the devil is a man who opposes justice.

We have been sacrificing to devils. We have been supporting divisions which are very expensive. Our religious and political and commercial is waxed old and is most ready to pass away. It has become too burdensome when the power of money becomes so great as to build a wall so high between the consumer and the producer that it causes want, hunger and nakedness, misery and distress, it is time for the people to wake up; many ways we sacrifice to devils.

Now, the people are tired of sacrificing to devils, and to Mrs. Babylon. I do believe God has got about enough of it. I do believe that He will bring it to a close the latter part of 1932. I will give my authority for saying this: see Matthew 1 and 17, so we find from Abraham to David are 14 generations, so I understand. When Christ was born that was David's day, that it has reference to. To prove this I will quote a few words, Matthew 1:1, Jesus Christ, the son of David; Matthew 9 and 27, Thou, the son of David, have mercy on us; Matthew 15 and 22, O, Lord, thou son of David, my daughter is greivously vexed with a devil; also 20 and 30; Mark 10 and 47; Luke 18 and 38; 20 and 41; Romans 1 and 3; Second Timothy 2 and 8; Hebrews 4 and 7; says He limiteth a certain day, saying in David today after so long a time as it is said today, if ye will hear His voice, harden not your hearts. Revelations 4 and 7, and to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write these things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David. Revelations 5 and 5, and one of the elders saith unto me, weep not, behold the lion of the tribe of Judea; the root of David hath prevailed to open the book. Revelations 22 and 16 says I, Jesus, have sent mine angel to testify to you these things in the churches, I am the root and the offspring of David and the bright and morning star.

Luke 1 and 69 says, and hath raised up an horn of salutation for us in the house of His servant, David. Now I think the Scripture I have quoted is sufficient to prove that when Christ came it was the day of David, when Matthew said from Abraham to David were 14 generations, here is the part we want to get at. Now from David, as David's day which applies to the birth of Christ, from that time to the going into Babylon are 14 generations, and from the going into Babylon until Christ are 14 generations, so we see from David, or David's day, is 28 generations, when He is to come and set up His Kingdom here on earth. Now we find in Psalms 90 and 10, the days of our years are three score and ten, evidently 70 years make a generation. I also find that 360 days, a Hebrew year. Multiply 360 by 70, giving 25,200 then multiply that by 28, giving 705,600 days, which is the days from David's day, or the birth of Christ, to Christ's second coming, or Christ's day, or His rule or kingdom here on earth.

In other words, there will be 705,600 days from David to His second coming, then multiply 1932 by 365, we get 705,180, then add 483 for leap years, we have 705,663. So, we see these 28 generations expire about October 29, 1932. I have been told that we have an extra day every 100 years, then if so it will expire in November, 1932. However, it is drawing near, I don't understand that Christ will come in person, but in rule, and in power, and in glory, and will take from the hands of the oppressor, the kingdom and will establish His in righteousness, and, it will stand forever. With best respect to all.

WEST END COMMENTS

By W. B. C.

Wonder how long before "Kaiser Edmudnson," of Jefferson Empire, will declare war against the State. Already his "diplomatic" activities have resulted in decidedly lowering our standards of democracy quite a bit.

Why vote any more at all? The "Powers that be" make the ballots tell any kind of a story that suits their plans.

When they legislate what the farmer shall or shall not plant, it is only "asound the corner" when they will tell you how much sugar you can have in your coffee and how many biscuits you may eat.

Mr. Atkinson, the widely known gasoline distributor, has moved his family into the former W. A. Kemp home in West End Heights, and is now selling the Shell products.

Business in West End holds up to almost normal. None of the business houses seem to have ghosts in them so far.

I understand that a regular cafeteria and barbecue place i ssoon to open up in West End. People must eat, you know, and I hope this new place will succeed from the go.

Cotton at 5c per pound and picking at 25 cents per hundred does not seem to arouse much enthusiasm.

Mr. Sam Johnson has 5 or 6 acres of cotton out here that is simply fine. With not a boll picked yet it makes one almost shudder to think what a big rain would do in that snow bank.

The funeral Monday of Miss Arlene Sanford was very largely attended by the good people of West End.

Mr. W. D. Dunlap and wife are making an extended visit to their daughter, Mrs. Williams, of Selma. They are widely known throughout the western portion of the county and are universally loved by all who know them. The people of West End Heights certainly miss their cheerful presence and are hoping for their return.

Later: I learn that cotton picking out this way has advanced to 40 cents per hundred. We must be about to turn the "Hoover Corner" at last. I saw a check this morning for 49 cents. It represented the munificent balance a farmer received for the seed out of a bale of cotton after paying for the ginning. The farmer is happy because they did not take his cotton also.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Hays and children, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Binford and a sister of Mrs. Binfords from Selam, made a most enjoyable trip to Mitchell Dam, Log Cabin Beach and Lay Dam Sunday. They were joined on the way by Mr. Zeb Mims and wife.

What did you all do Labor Day, rejoice or mourn?

Sorry to learn that several cases of typhoid fever have broken out in the Liberty Hill neighborhood.

Did you ever stop to think what a great blessing good neighbors are? You ought to move to West End Heights and find out just what they mean in life

Before prosperity smiles on us again the people have got to stop their mad race after the dollar, get down on their knees and ask God to take the lines and drive again. We have some mighty smart folks these days and any quantity of wonderful machines, but we can't make a success of operating the universe yet.

Watermelons are so plentiful that thousands are rotting in the patch while tens of thousands of people over the land long for them in vain. But look at wheat. Millions of bushels going to waste while people all over the land are starving for a loaf of bread. Better ask God to regulate these supply and demand questions. Evidently man can't handle the job.

You can get everything on credit except these: Free schools we hear so much squawking about. When you hit them it's spot cash—or go to jail for not sending your kids to school. How is that for a Democracy of freedom?

It is the duty of every county newspaper in Alabama to print each week plainly and truthfully the "frame ups" that go on at our capitol. Let the people all know the facts and they will promptly take care of them at the polls.

Here is hoping for happiness and good luck to everyone and an earnest admonition to talk over your trials and troubles with God, the only one who is able to knock out this depression and make times good again.

To this end and for these purposes, the State is authorized to appropriate funds and for constructional purposes only the State is authorized also to issue and sell interest-bearing negotiable State bonds in addition to those already authorized and sold under Article XX and XX-A, as amendments to the Constitution of 1901, in an amount not to exceed the sum of twenty-five million dollars ($25,000,000.00), to be issued under such denominations, numbers and series, maturing at such times as may be provided by law, and all such bonds shall bear a rate of interest not greater than six per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, and shall be sold at a price not less than par value thereof.

Section 2. The State Highway Commission or Highway Department shall locate, construct and maintain highways, bridges and State trunk roads so as to connect each county seat with the county seat of the adjoining county by the most direct or most feasible route by a permanent road, having due regard for the public welfare, and shall connect the county seats of the several border counties at or near the state line with a public highway in the border states. Provided, that in counties which are divided into two or more judicial divisions in each of which regular terms of the circuit court are held, the places where said terms of court are held, shall likewise be connected with each other.

Section 3. The proceeds of said bonds shall be used for constructing and/or surfacing of roads and constructing and/or repairing bridges, but not for maintenance or discharging of contract debts, liability or obligations existing prior to the adoption of this amendment.

Section 4. Eighteen million four hundred twenty-five thousand dollars ($18,425,000.00) of the proceeds of said bonds shall be set aside by the Governor and apportioned in amounts of Two Hundred seventy-five thousand dollars ($275,000.00) to each of the respective counties of the State which must be expended by the State Highway Commission or Highway Department in each of said counties for construction, which shall include hard surfacing, of existing and also new public roads and bridges therein. The remaining proceeds of said bonds shall be used for the construction, which shall include surfacing, of existing, or new highways and constructing or repairing bridges in the State.

Section 5. The proceeds of such bonds shall be kept separate and apart from all other funds and no part of the same shall ever be used in honoring a warrant not legally drawn against such proceeds.

Section 6. There is hereby levied and every distributor, re'ail dealer or storer shall pay an excise tax of one cent per gallon upon the selling, distributing or withdrawing from storage for any use gasoline, provided, however, that the excise tax is not levied upon the sale of gasoline in interstate commerce, and provided further that where this excise tax shall have been paid by a distributor or by a retail dealer or storer such payment shall be sufficient, the intention being that this tax shall not be paid but once. The terms 'distributor', 'retail dealer', 'storer', 'selling', 'distributing', 'withdrawing' and 'gasoline' are used as the same are used in existing gasoline excise tax laws of the State and shall be so construed, and all rights, duties, liabilities, penalties, powers and methods pertaining to the collection of gasoline excise taxes under such existing laws of the State shall apply to the collection, payment and accounting for the within excise tax, provided, the Legislature may limit, extend or further define the same. The excise tax of one cent herein levied shall be in addition to the excise gasoline taxes provided by existing laws of the State, but this section shall not be construed in any way as limiting the power of the Legislature to increase or decrease this or any other gasoline tax.

Section 7. The one cent excise tax hereinbefore levied shall be used first to create a sinking fund for the prompt and faithful payment of the principal and the interest on the bonds herein authorized, and, second, by the State for the construction, improvement, repair and maintenance of public roads, highways and bridges of this State.

Section 8. The bonds herein authorized when issued shall be a direct obligation of the State, and for the prompt and faithful payment of the principal and interest thereon the full faith and credit of the State is hereby irrevocably pledged and such bonds shall be exempt forever from taxes of every kind.

Section 9. The bonds herein authorized shall be issued and sold in the same manner by a Bond Commission as set forth, defined and prescribed in Article 5 of Chapter 32, Code of Alabama, 1923.

Section 10. That House Bill No. 1204 by Mr. Tunstall, if and when passed by both houses of the Legislature of Alabama of 1931 and approved by the Governor and being, "A bill to be entitled an act to impose, for the use and purpose of surviving, preserving, maintaining, constructing and regulating the use of public roads and bridges in the State of Alabama, an excise tax on all persons, companies, agencies, corporations, and associations who sell, distribute, store or draw from storage for any purpose whatsoever, gasoline or any other liquid motor fuels or devices or any substitute therefor within the State of Alabama; providing for the collection of such excise tax and the payment of same into the State Treasury; providing for the enforcement of this act and fixing a penalty for the violation of the provisions hereof, providing that the said excise tax so imposed shall be in addition to all other excise tax now imposed by law; and, providing that freight agents or railroads and all agents of all transportation companies operating within the State of Alabama and who transport motor fuels shall report to the State Tax Commission all shipments of gasoline or any substitute therefor, received at any of their stations within the State", be and the same is hereby ratified, confirmed and validated and made constitutional as a law, and such ratification, confirmation, validation and constitutionally as a law, shall, according to the terms thereof when finally passed, in the manner aforesaid, take effect and be effective on the day of the passage of said bill by both houses of the Legislature of Alabama of 1931, and approved by the Governor, as fully as if said bill was set out in words and figures herein."

I further direct and proclaim that notices of the election, upon the above set forth amendment to the Constitution of Alabama, be given by publishing the same once a week for eight consecutive weeks prior to the 3rd day of November, 1931, in each county of the State of Alabama in a newspaper published in said county.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and have caused the great seal of the State to be affixed at the Capitol, in the city of Montgomery, on this the 3rd day of September, 1931.

CHAPTER XLIII

The sixth session of the supreme war council was convened June 1, 1918. The important matter of further shipment of American troops was taken up.

As already indicated, it was my opinion that neither the character of the troops to be sent over nor their disposition was within the province of the council to decide, but that these questions should be determined according to circumstances and after discussion with the allies.

So I objected to their consideration by the council, as such, and suggested a meeting outside the council, which was approved.

Accordingly, in the late afternoon, General Foch, Lord Milner, British war minister, General Weygand and I, with Colonels Conner and Boyd, met in the premier's room. General Foch began by stating the serious condition of the allies and proposed the continued shipment from America of nothing but infantry and machine-gun units in June and July, in effect 250,000 in each month. Every one realized the gravity of the allied situation as strongly as he did, but, as previously and persistently contended by me, there were two sides to the question.

Foch Becomes Excited.

I was prepared to make some concessions and stated my views, but neither facts nor arguments seemed to make any impression. General Foch especially was very positive and earnest, and, in fact, became quite excited, waving his hands and repeating: "The battle, the battle; nothing else counts."

With equal emphasis I urged that we must build up our organization as fast as possible to carry on the battle to the end, and that our program had been seriously interrupted by concessions already made.

I called attention to the fact that the railways all over France were on the point of breaking down for lack of efficient operators and of skilled workmen to repair rolling stock; that our ports would be hopelessly blocked unless we could improve the railways; this his plan would leave us 200,000 men short to complete combat units and fill up special organizations that were absolutely necessary in the S. O. S., and, finally, that the restriction of our shipments to infantry and machine-gun units would be a very dangerous and short-sighted policy.

To much of this he paid little or no attention and replied that all these things could be postponed.

Wanted Wilson Informed.

Graeme Thompson, British expert on transportation and supply, came into the room at this point with Mr. Lloyd George and General Sir Henry Wilson, and took part in the discussion. Mr. Lloyd George said he thought President Wilson would be deeply interested to get General Foch's view of the situation, and added that as America had no prime minister present he thought it would be inconvenient for us to make a decision, but that this subject should be brought before the whole council.

I then called attention to a cable from Secretary of War Baker, already quoted, showing that the President had been much embarrassed by representations made to him personally by the French and British ambassadors, and had suggested that the matter might be settled by a conference between General Foch and myself. I pointed out that the cable did not mention the supreme war council, and I again stated my opposition to making the subject one of general discussion by all allied representatives and their staffs.

I did not fail to point out further that the President was trusting my judgment in this matter. As nothing was being accomplished and hoping the number of participants in the discussion might be limited, I proposed we adjourn until the following day.

Pershing Again Answers Foch.

The next afternoon when we assembled M. Clemenceau was waiting for the rest of us, and instead of there being fewer conferees the number had increased. Not unlike the situation at Abbeville a month before, everybody was keyed up, and, as we had expected, the question had to be fought all over again.

General Foch supported by M. Clemenceau and Lloyd George, wanted nothing but infantry and machine gunners in June and July, to which I was strongly opposed, again insisting that sufficient importance had not been attached to my reasons for the necessity of the auxiliary troops omitted in June.

Foch resorted to his often-repeated question whether I was willing to take the risk, to which I replied very positively that I was ready to assume any responsibility my proposal might entail, but that I must have a greater proportion of other troops to keep the American organization from going to smash.

Men Called in May Untrained.

Other objections, which the allies apparently overlooked, were that the untrained men called out in May could not possibly be ready for service until a considerable time after arrival, and that neither the French nor the British could provide all the equipment and land transportation they would need. In accordance with my program, I was willing to agree to the shipment of fully trained infantry not needed for the instruction of new drafts, but felt that this point should be left to the judgment of the secretary of war.

American Troops Moving to the Front.

Mr. Lloyd George then concluded that as a consequence July would be a blank, and in a rather dejected tone he said the allies were in a sense in the hands of the United States. He spoke of the generous and chivalrous attitude of President Wilson, and said all they could do was to acquaint him with their needs and call upon him to come to their aid, more particularly to the aid of France at the period of the most terrible extremity that she had yet encountered.

CHAPTER XLIV

Further conversation at the session of the supreme war council showed the uncertainty in the minds of the allies. Prime Minister Lloyd George, reverting to losses, said that before the great German attack in May he had been informed positively the Germans had only 400,000 replacements left, and that now, after the most violent fighting, in which it was reported the Germans had suffered very heavy losses, they still had more than 300,000 replacements.

The allies also had 300,000, but it was now contended, he said, that the British army was on the decline while that of the enemy was not.

Mr. Lloyd George asked if that could be cleared up, to which General Foch replied that it was because the enemy managed better, and he went on to say that Germany, with a population of 68,000,000 could maintain 204 divisions, while Great Britain, with 46,000,000 inhabitants, could keep up only 43. It had been stated that the British counted on keeping up 53 divisions, but that ten of them would be practically American.

Then, in response to a further question by Mr. Lloyd George, General Foch said he could not pretend to say where Germany procured her replacements; possibly it might be from prisoners returned from Russia.

Three Map Program.

After further argument on discrepancies of various figures, and insistence by General Foch that the number of divisions be maintained, the consideration of the transportation of American troops in June and July was resumed. The discussion having reached an impasse, it was suggested that Lord Milner, British war minister, General Foch and I should undertake to draw up a program.

In the consideration of the question by us the point of my contention was won when General Weygand, who was Foch's principal adviser, remarked that it would be as well to leave the new drafts to be trained at home a month or so longer.

Although my arguments had failed to make any impression on General Foch, he at once approved Weygand's suggestion.

Agreement on U. S. Troops.

With this out of the way we soon drew up the agreement embodied in the following cablegram sent to Washington June 2:

"(a) For June: First, absolute priority shall be given the transportation of 170,000 combatant troops (viz., six divisions without artillery, ammunition trains or supply trains, amounting to 126,000 men and 44,000 replacements for combat troops); second, 25,400 men for the service of railway, of which 13,400 have been asked by the French minister of transportation; third, the balance to be troops of categories to be determined by the commander in chief, American expeditionary forces.

"(b) For July: First, absolute priority for the shipment of 140,000 combatant troops of the nature defined above, four divisions minus artillery, etc., amounting to 84,000 men plus 56,000 replacements; second, the balance of the 250,000 to consist of troops to be designated by the commander in chief, American expeditionary forces.

"(c) It is agreed that if available tonnage in either month allows the transportation of a larger number of men than 250,000 the excess tonnage will be employed in the transportation of combat troops as defined above.

"(d) We recognize that the combatant troops to be dispatched in July may have to include troops with insufficient training, but we consider the present emergency to justify a temporary and exceptional departure by the United States from sound principles of training, especially as a similar course is being followed by France and Great Britain. (Signed)

"FOCH, MILNER, PERSHING."

The prime ministers cabled President Wilson expressing their thanks for the promptness of American aid in the present emergency.

Yanks at Chateau Thierry.

The Second and Third divisions, facing the Germans near Chateau Thierry, had made their places in line secure, giving heart to the French, who were trying to stabilize their own positions around the newly formed salient. We shall hear more of these two divisions later. Although fully taken for granted by all of us, it was none the less gratifying to see these divisions, for the first time in the line, acquit themselves so well.

En route to Chaumont we motored eastward through Montmirail, passing long columns of French refugees fleeing from their homes, many on foot, men and women with bundles on their backs, leading the smaller children, driving their stock before them and hauling in various types of conveyance the few remaining worldly goods they were able to take with them. Almost indescribable were many similar scenes as reported by our troops as they came up to reinforce the retiring French.

It seemed to me then that if this picture of civilization engaged in the persecution of innocent and unarmed noncombatants, mostly women and children, could be brought home to all peoples, reason would be forced upon rulers and governments where too often their passions and ambitions assume control.

As a result of the German successes against the French something akin to a panic prevailed in Paris. Probably a million people left during the spring and there was grave apprehension among the officials lest the city be taken. Plans were made to remove the government to Bordeaux and we ourselves were prepared to remove our offices.

POOR RADIO PROGRAMS

It must be obvious to the most casual radio listener that the standard of programs, which has never been high, is steadily deteriorating. One recent writer declares, with rather convincing argument to back up his contention, that radio is committing suicide.

While it is true that there may still be heard a few high-class programs, if one will exercise due diligence in picking them out, for the most part the offerings on the air are not worth listening to by anyone possessing intelligence above that of a moron.

Regardless of individual tastes most persons buy radio sets for the purpose of entertainment. The form of entertainment most suitable for radio is music, especially instrumental music. Speeches, lectures and so-called educational features may appeal to some, but all these are available in unlimited quanity.

Another paradox is that when a thing is swallowed up it goes down.

Bare legs are disturbing to reformers and stockings manufacturers.

MORAL ECHOES

D. W. Haskew

I was riding along the road last week and passed two boys and one dog. Evidently the two boys were joint partners in the ownership of the dog. One was holding the head of the dog, and the other boy was swinging to his hind legs. They were seeing to it that their dog would not be crushed under the wheels of the automobile. Early one morning I passed a farm house, and about two hundred yards beyond I saw a little boy standing by the roadside with his dog. The little dog had his two front paws resting against the breast of the boy, and they were about the same height. The boy was looking straight into the eyes of the dog and the dog was looking straight into the eyes of the boy. Beyond them was the rising sun, and as I saw that picture of affection I was filled with admiration. I know no finer friendship and no more loyal devotion than is seen between a boy and his dog. If you want to get along well with a boy, you must not kick his dog around.

Many years ago, when I was a barefooted boy on the farm, I had me a little dog and we loved each other with unselfish devotion. It was our duty to go to the woods early every morning to find the calves. While I was dressing my little dog would be scratching on my door and telling me to hurry and let him look into my eyes. When the door was opened he would bounce into my bosom with his two front feet, and then run on ahead to show me the direction of the calf bell. When I went away to college my little dog had grown old for a dog but he loved me still. My first stay away from home the dog of my heart refused to eat. He would stay around the front gate and look and whine. When I came home at Christmas he had grown thin. He saw me get out of the buggy and it is needless to describe the antics of that little dog. If you have ever had a dog to love you, you already know what it is to be greeted by that dog. Day and night while I was at home that little pet stayed close by me. He followed me to the train when I was returning to college, and on seeing that I was leaving in the coach, he made a leap to get on the train with me. He fell down between the wheels and was crushed. I have never had another dog. Parents, do not object to your boys having and loving a dog. There is something noble growing in the soul of a boy when he is capable of loving a dog. You do well when you let your boy have a dog and send them to the woods together.

In Barbour county there was a little five-year-old child who had a little dog for its constant companion. One day the little girl was stricken with Typhoid fever. All during her sickness the little dog stayed under the bed, coming out every few moments and lifting its forefeet to the edge of the bed, it would stand there looking into the face of the suffering child. Finally the child died. The little dog watched the undertaker as he placed the little form in the casket, and then he lay down under where the form was resting. When the funeral was over the pallbearers carried the casket to the nearby cemetery, and the little dog walked along under the casket. One of the family had to hold the dog while the casket was being lowered into the grave and while the grave was being filled. They carried the dog back to the house, but it would not stay. They tried to induce it to eat, but it refused all food. For a month it remained at the grave of its little companion, and then it went on to be with her in that brighter world. It had lost its heart and it had nothing for which to live.

A fine car dashed up to the doctor's office and a man and his wife were seen to carry a dog on a stretcher into the office. The doctor came in and the man said to him, "Doctor, save my dog. It matters not about the cost, save his life." The doctor inquired why he was so anxious about a dog. He was told this story, "A few moments ago I was sitting on my porch watching the children play about a hundred yards from my gate. I saw a big mad dog make a dash for my children and this dog stepped in between. The bull dog was much stronger than my dog, and while I was making the distance to where I could shoot the mad dog, he had thrown my dog flat of his back and was cutting his throat with his fangs. When I did get close enough to take aim my dog was in a manner dead. Doctor, please save his life. He gave his life for my children and he must not die." It was only a matter of a few moments and the noble old dog was still in death. He was given an honorable burial and over his casket were these words, "Ponto was only a dog, but he gave his life for five children."

What fools some dogs can be. Not long since I had to listen to a dog bark from one thirty to three thirty A. M. He was pushing it out at the rate of 132 barks per minute. If my calculations are correct I had to listen to 15,880 explosions in two hours. That was pure dog in that brute. Fifteen years ago I drove the first automobile ever going into one section of Clarke county. A farm house on the top of a hill was guarded by one of these big mouthed dogs that thought he could bluff the world. He had never seen a car before, and he made it his business to catch my car. He buried his teeth into the tire, and it jerked his head down under the wheel and mashed his jaw. He let go the wheel and set up a yell. The last I saw of that dog he was going up the hill cursing like a sailor because he had caught more than he could handle. Wish that some wise guy would rise up and tell me why a fool dog will sit on his tail and bark for hours at the moon?

WITHOUT RAILROADS
What would these crops be worth!

At this harvest season, when American farmers have produced bumper crops which must be transported to markets, the readers of this newspaper should pause to consider the importance of American railroads to the progress of both rural and urban citizens.

If there were no railroads and the farmers were forced to use trucks or planes, how could these enormous crops be gotten to market?

With the disturbing conditions which exist in the transportation industry today, the highly regulated and over-taxed railroads are suffering such enormous losses in revenue that, though they are the most efficiently operated transportation system in all the world and afford the lowest cost to the shipper and traveler, the value of their properties is constantly being endangered by other forms of transportation which operate without adequate taxation or regulation.

The railroads deserve your patronage. They built this nation and must continue to be the backbone of its transportation system. The steam railroads are appealing to the fairness of the American people in the hope that an equalization of operating conditions may be brought about among all forms of transportation so that the railroads may earn a more nearly fair return on their investments.

The Railroads Must Earn To Spend

¶ The Transportation Act permits the railroads to earn 5¾% on the value of their properties, and yet since this law became effective in 1920 the roads did not earn in excess of 5.45% in the best year, and during the year 1930 earned 3.54%, though their taxes have increased $76,500,000 or 22% in this period of time. During the first four months of 1931 the rate of return has been only 2.23%.

VERBENA, ITS HIGHLIGHTS OF ARISTOCRACY OF FORTY-ODD YEARS AGO

In the issue of the News of last week there was carried many interesting items about Verbena, Alabama, and its residents of forty-three years ago. These items were taken from The Verbena "High School Alpha," a small newspaper published and edited by the students of the Verbena High School and dated March 29, 1888. Following are more of these items which date back those forty-odd years ago, and will bring to mind of the older residents of the county the happenings in and around Verbena in 1888:

WORDS OF CHEER

Our "High School Paper," how pleasant and new,
Just what Verbena needed, with items so true,
To tell of its attractions it is just the thing,
For the dear little place is good enough for a King.

With air and water so pure, and so many nice folks,
On earth there are none better, indeed this is no hoax.
We have two nice churches and ministers four,
Who live in our midst, full of Christian lore.

We all are united, and constantly try,
For good in our village, to make the average high.
Some of the sermons are a blessed feast,
And do us good through the week to say the least.

One from the text "Through a glass darkly we now see,"
Was a comfort as precious as any could be.
Of our school we'll not say much for fear that some
May think it all talk to get other scholars to come.

We have capable teachers, and if scholars are enthused
With ambition, they can learn even problems abstruse.
All success to your paper, we approve your plan,
And you may know from this writing will do all we can.

A FRIEND.

Verbena, March 23rd.

AVARICE

Generally, the more people have the more they want. They ought not to be so hard to please; but I suppose it is human nature. Why, I have known men who never married because they knew that wives would spend their money.

An avaricious man is ever striving to lay up wealth and denies himself all the luxuries of life. He saves every dime that dollars may accumulate, and, after awhile, his eyes will behold no glory except in the glittering gold. When a person is so deeply engrossed in the love of gain his desire becomes a sin.

I don't suppose that any man intends to be a miser when he first starts out in the world; but he is so intent upon making a fortune that he does not know when he crosses over the boundary line and becomes a pilgrim in the land of misers. No man will admit that he is an avaricious man. We have often read stories of these miserable old misers who have spent their lives in accumulating wealth, refusing always to aid the poor or to use their riches in any way beneficial to mankind. We do not have in our country any of those fabled misers of old, but we sometimes meet with people who are so deeply imbued with the desire of gain that their spiritual life is dwarfed. Their social and religious duties are neglected. The Bible has reference to this kind of a man when it says: "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God."

FANNIE M. DUDLEY.

"THE JUNCTION"

The most beautiful natural scenery in this section, excepting the "Turn Round," is located about one mile north-east of Verbena and is formed by the junction of three creeks—Chestnut, Sandy and Rocky. As you go down Chestnut, the largest of the three creeks, and approach the Junction, your eyes rest upon one of nature's most charming displays.

Sandy Creek, just above the Junction, flows over immense ledges of rock, and Rocky Creek has along its banks beautiful trees of almost every variety. On the right bank of Chestnut, immediately below the Junction, is a high mountain which comes down, almost perpendicular, to the water's edge. This mountain contains a large cave overshadowed by a huge rock. During "the late unpleasantness" this cave was noted as the hiding place of deserters.

In the union of streams, nature teaches us a lesson as pure and beautiful as their sparkling, crystal waters. As these streams, bringing with them their troubled waves, come together and form a peaceful and perfect union, so the voice of their commingling waters tells the nations of the world to go and do likewise. As the necessity of journeying together forced these streams to make peace, so the booming towns of Alabama, having to travel the same road to wealth, should cease their grumblings and unite their forces that they may be better prepared to make the race before them.

SAUL'S LIFE COMPARED TO SINNERS OF TODAY

By Robert Lee Lester

Saul, Saul, thou heartless Saul,
Who persecuteth Christians,
Who consented to the death of Stephen
Who holy served the Master,
And yet his heart was hardened,
And Jerusalem could not be larger.
So to the field he went to find them who fled,
Wherever they maybe, sowing the blessed word of life.
He made his flight to Damascus.
The Christians to receive
To stone them, and to bind them, and send them to their death.
But the light shone around
And he fell to the ground.
"Saul, Saul, thou heartless Saul,
Why do this to me," said Jesus of Nazareth.
I died upon the Cross of Calvary
To save men from their sin.
Saul made a complete confession,
To preach the Gospel to the sinner,
Wherever it may be
To win the blessed victory
To wear a crown of life,
At the Cross of Calvary.
Oh! Sinner of today, your soul is just as precious as Saul of long ago
So why not turn to Christ today and be made complete—
That you may wear a crown of life
At the Cross of Calvary.

This was written by a young Christian who has just started into the new life. She was kindly like Saul. She never whipped them or stoned them, but was always consenting. But now she has turned right around and is working hard for the Master. May this poem help some who are out in darkness in this county to turn right around and serve the Master. Life is so short upon earth, so why throw it away with the pleasures of sin.

For the sweetest life is a Christian one, although temptations are many. And laborers are few, but it's sweet to know a crown of life waits for you and me at the Cross of Calvary.

Now, let every Christian worker in this county get busy. For there is so much to be done, and such a short time to do it in. Although we live a hundred years, our life is only a few hours compared with our life we are to spend after we cross the river to our home of love and joy in the mansions of rest, or to our home of pain and sorrow in the dungeons of sinners. Which home do you choose? You had better make your confession today for tomorrow is not promised. Prepare for we know not when the Son of Man shall come or send his death angel, to bear us away to one of the two homes that are prepared for us.

A NEW FRIEND.

Clanton Methodist Church

D. W. Haskew, Pastor

We are pleased with the way our Sunday school is growing. We are making next Sunday "Rally Day" in our Sunday school, and we want you present. Come and bring someone with you. The day schools are now in progress, and you should line up with your church.

At 11 A. M. we have a special subject, "The Power of Music." If you are a lover of music we urge that you hear this message. At 7:30 Sunday night we have a special subject for young people, "If I Were a Youth Again." We are making this service one of special honor for the High school students and the faculty of the school. We will reserve seats of honor for them, and we urge the attendance of every student and teacher. Let the parents come and bring the children.

All officers and teachers in the Sunday school are requested to be present at the church next Sunday morning at 9 o'clock. Matters of importance will be discussed.

Line up with your church at once and lets put new life into our churches.

WHY NOT USE THEM?

From time to time we see accounts of various new mechanical inventions which appear to fill a real need, but those who might profit by them seem slow to put them to use.

For example, we have been reading for a long time about a new automobile jack attached to the car, whereby any wheel may be lifted by manipulating a gadget from the driver's seat. But we have never seen one on any car.

Again, we know that there has been invented a device which prevents stalling of an automobile—certainly a most desirable invention. Many lives have been lost by the stalling of an automobile engine while crossing a railroad tracks or under other emergency conditions.

Many engines have the disconcerting habit of dying when slowed down or stopped in traffic, and this habit often has the most serious consequences.

It looks as if enterprising manufacturers would eagerly adopt a device which could be depended upon to avoid this danger. Car owners would certainly be glad to have this protection.

What is the good of useful inventions unless we use them?

Fox—I notice that since Doggett got married he doesn't go round so much.

Hunt—No, since the knot was tied he hasn't had so much rope!

Business Man—Hun, I've tried to write with that kind for years.

WOMEN: watch your BOWELS

What should women do to keep their bowels moving freely? A doctor should know the answer. That is why pure Syrup Pepsin is so good for women. It just suits their delicate organism. It is the prescription of an old family doctor who has treated thousands of women patients, and who made a special study of bowel troubles.

It is fine for children, too. They love its taste. Let them have it every time their tongues are coated or their skin is sallow. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made from fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients.

When you've a sick headache, can't eat, are bilious or sluggish; and at the times when you are most apt to be constipated, take a little of this famous prescription (all drug stores keep it ready in big bottles), and you'll know why Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the favorite laxative of over a million women!

CENTRAL SINGING SOCIETY ELECTS OFFICERS FOR YEAR

The Central Singing Society launched out on its second year last Sunday when new officers were elected and forthwith took charge and conducted the singing at Concord church, two miles east of Clanton. The society was organized at that place on the first Sunday in September, 1930, and since that time has failed to meet only one time—being rained out one Sunday that it was supposed to meet at Walnut Creek. Of course, the society called in its regular meeting several times in order for its members to go to all-day singings. There has not been a single Sunday afternoon that the society met when there was a lack of interest; there were good singings every single time.

The new officers elected were: Chairman, L. T. Grant; 1st and 2nd vice Chairmen, O. L. Devaughn and Archie Devaughn; secretary-treasurer, T. E. Wyatt; chaplain, R. M. Robinson. The committee for arranging the programs and attending to other business for the society was appointed by the new chairman as follows: Willie L. Mims, W. M. Devaughn and J. R. Robinson. If the readers of this paper will allow the secretary to ignore himself, we will state that the above list of officers are competent and trustworthy in every respect. They are heartily interested in the advancement of singing and will do their best to make this year's work the best success possible, and will accomplish such success with the proper support from the members of the society.

It was decided by the society to purchase two dozen Stamps-Baxter books to have on hand for visiting singers; all members were urged to purchase books of their own. It was also decided that arrangements be made by next Sunday afternoon to purchase the same number of the Morris-Henson books. So all members please come prepared next Sunday afternoon to raise a small collection for this purpose.

Those directing in the singing last Sunday afternoon at Concord were J. W. Clackler, T. E. Wyatt, Lee J. Grant, Chester Wyatt, O. L. Devaughn, J. R. Robinson and Jesse Jones. Three quartets were sung by W. M. Devaughn, Jesse Jones, Archie Devaughn and Elbert Hall.

The society will meet next Sunday afternoon at Providence. Singers and lovers of music in this part of the county have a cordial invitation to attend this as well as all subsequent meetings of the society.

T. E. WYATT, Secretary.

KIWANIS CLUB AIDS BLIND BOY

Continuing the fine and worthwhile work being done in this county, the Kiwanis Club of Clanton aided materially in sending Barney Abbott, age 19, blind, of near Billingsley, to Talladega to enter school for his fourth year. Abbott appeared to be a worthy young fellow and the Kiwanians and others responded wonderfully to a request for clothes for him, and for transportation to school.

He left Monday well clothed, and stated, "I'm going to work hard this time for you fine fellows. You all have helped me, and I'm going to work hard. I'm anxious to study this year."

LIGHTNING SETS FIRE TO HOME AND BARN SAT.

Buildings of L.O. Zimmerman Completely Destroyed On Saturday Afternoon

During an electrical storm about four miles east of Clanton on last Saturday afternoon, lightning brought misfortune to the family of Lucien O. Zimmerman by striking his barn, causing it to burn, as well as destroying his home.

There was no one at home when the bolt struck the barn, as Mrs. Zimmerman was in Birmingham, and Mr. Zimmerman had only left his home a few minutes on his way to Birmingham to get his wife. Shortly after the lightning hit the building it was enveloped in flames, and a neighbor sitting on his porch saw the fire, and summoning aid, managed to save all the household furnishings in the home before that building was destroyed. The flames fed fast on the feed stuffs in the barn and spread to a small outhouse between the barn and the home, then on to the home.

Mr. Zimmerman is a prominent farmer of that part of the county, out near the Lay Dam Road. All the feed stuff and implements in his barn fell prey to the flames, and much credit is due to neighbors and passers-by for working swiftly and saving the household goods.

Truck, Flat Go To River Bottom

A queer case for a good detective faced Ed Mims and others last Thursday when Ed's flat on Coosa River was found nose down in the river. The case became more complicated when it was discovered that a Ford truck was in the river also, holding the flat down.

The truck was soon raised by several men with the aid of motor boats and another flat. It had been stripped of wheels, battery and other parts, and apparently driven into the river. It is said the truck belonged to Emmett Singleton, who stated the truck was stolen from his yard. The wheels, tires battery, etc., of the truck were found further down the river on the bank, and Ed says he is still missing a good small paddle boat. No solution has been found as reported, to this strange occurence.

The boy scouts of this district have been very active during their first year of the present organization as will be remembered when we note the various activities in which they have been engaged since last October.

A good representation of the Clanton and Lay Dam troops attended the Scout Jamboree at Auburn May 1. Our boys did outstanding work at the Old Soldiers' Reunion in Montgomery and were highly praised for same. A good per cent of them attended summer camp at Spring Villa near Opelika. John Ezell and Sidney Reynolds made highest record at camp on merit badge work.

Civic service in which the boys have taken part are as follows: Directing traffic, aiding with school field day program; distributed Christmas packages; put up Community Chest posters; aided in clean-up campaign.

At the last meeting of the Clanton troop the scouts were asked to state what rank in scouting they expect to advance to by Christmas. Their re- Hal Broadhead, Life; Joe Moore, Life; plies were as follows: John Ezell, Life; Sidney Reynolds, Life; Wesley Danforth, Star; Phillip Nelson, Star; Carl Jones, Star; Herbert Neighbors, First Class; Dan Smith, First Class; U. L. Baker, First Class; Joe Hall Johnson, First Class; John McNair, First Class; Milton Diefenderfer, Second Class; Jeff Miller, Second Class.

To obtain these various ranks the boys will have to appear before a committee of adult citizens of the community and prove their knowledge pertaining to scouting required for the various ranks in scouting.

Next week there will be published a list of merit badge examiners before whom the boys will have to appear and stand examination for their various merit badges.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION AT NEWSALEM SOON

Chilton County Association Will Gather For All-Day Meeting

The executive committee of the Chilton County Associational Sunday school convention announces that an all-day meeting will be held at New Salem Baptist church near Thorsby the first Sunday in October, which will be the 4th of that month. As yet no program has been arranged, but this preliminary announcement is made in order that all Sunday schools in the Chilton County Association may arrange to send delegates. However, the committee is in position to state that the program will be one out of the ordinary and will be of particular interest to all. It will not be dry, commonplace and uninteresting as is usual with such gatherings, but something will be happening all the time that will command the rapt attention of those in attendance.

The good people of New Salem have very graciously accepted the task of caring for the convention, and now it behooves the other churches of the association to do their part. Dinner is promised all delegates and others actually interested in Sunday school work of course, the old time free-for-all dinner on the ground is no longer expected of any community. All superintendents please keep this in mind and don't fail to have as many from your school as possible present.

LONG PLAN IS FAVORED HERE LAST SATURDAY

Resolution Endorsing Cotton Ban Plan Is Adopted At Farmers Meeting

At a mass meeting of farmers, bankers, merchants and others held at the courthouse here last Saturday afternoon, Governor Huey P. Long's plan to prohibit the planting of cotton in 1932 was discussed.

There were something like five hundred people present, men and women, and several spoke in regard to the plan. Judge L. H. Reynolds, spoke in favor of the plan, telling the audience of Chilton citizens, that one trouble with the country now is that there are too many politicians trying to politic, and went on to state some of the things the Commissioners Court of the county had been trying to do in this county, and what they expected to do.

Following this address the meeting was opened for discussion in which several took part. John Smith of Route Two rose and suggested a resolution that the Long Plan be approved of in this county, and also that debts covered by cotton in the county this year be stayed until 1932, and that the Governor of Alabama be asked to call the Legislature in special session to enact such a law as might be in favor of aiding the cotton growers of the state. Charlie Duke seconded this motion. A vote was immediately taken and the resolution unanimously adopted.

GOLFERS TO OPEN FIRST TOURNAMENT

Local Club Will Soon Have Champion; Qualifying Starts Saturday

Who is the champion golfer in the Clanton Golf Club? That is a question to be soon answered, if plans for a tournament among the members of the local club, mature, according to R. J Sumner, president of the club.

It is planned to open the qualifying rounds for the members on next Saturday afternoon, to run through next Tuesday. Following these plays, the match plays will start on next Wednesday and continue for several days, Mr. Sumner stated.

Much interest and talk is being put forth in regard to this proposed tournament, not only among the club members but among others in Clanton. There will be prizes of various classes, including a consolation prize. Already some are stating their opinion of who will be the champion of the club, but time will tell, and within the next several days, local golfers will be practicing up on how it's done, and maybe be calling on some Bobby Jones' idea to aid them.

The tournament is expected to last for about ten days after opening. The latest addition to the club is Eunice "Sunshine" Chism.

Correcting Children

The old idea that to spare the rod will spoil the child dates back to Proverbs, and it has been re-echoed down through the centuries by authors like John Skelton who lived a thousand years ago, and by every class and breed of re-write artists who have used quills, pens and typewriters, during all the intervening space of time.

But civilization has improved and corporal punishment of children is now condemed by leaders in the educational professions.

Old notions of threatening the child are tabooed by the United States Children's Bureau.

"A child who fights with his playmates should be removed from them. His inability to associate with them is ample punishment," says the Bureau. "One who refuses to eat food set before him may be punished by being denied dessert or some dish he especially likes. When the child gets into a tantrum and smashes his toy, he is sufficiently punished by not getting one to replace it.

"Physical punishment such as slapping and spanking should be used rarely, and if at all never in anger. The only justification for striking a child is when he has done something which if repeated might endanger his life, such as running into the street or playing with matches. The punishment for misdeeds of this kind should be prompt.

"The value of punishment is often exaggerated. A child should never be threatened. It is harmful to threaten him with punishment or hold over his head a penalty like being shut in a dark room."

Don't lose your head when correcting a child. Use the brains in your head, and be kind.

A. A. JACKSON WRITES ON SALARY CUTTING

Editor Chilton County News:

Here I am again as it were, standing on the bank of the Red Sea with thousands of other farmers and laborers, without a Moses to lead us to deliverance from the thousands of Pharachs that are causing millions of people to suffer for want of bread and clothing here in a land that God has blessed with more bread and clothing than the people of the world can possibly consume. Such conditions have never been before in this world.

Our Federal Farm Board has told us that we can't get any relief from them. Our national and local government officials have told us by their actions that they can't give any relief, but have the audacity to amend the constitution of our state for the purpose of heaping more bonds and taxes on a people that cannot carry the burdens that they now have on them. Shame, Shame, on Such Statesmanship.

Our commissioners have cut out the child welfare department of Chilton County. Our Board of Education has a ruling that discriminates against the little school child in favor of the larger school children in transporting the large school children to and from school and denying the little child transportation; I am afraid that during the coming winter there will be hundreds of little children in Chilton County who will suffer and become offended.

Read Matthew 18 and 6th verse which says: "But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck; and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea."

Our commissioners also cut Mr. Stapp's salary to $100.00 per month. If Mr. Stapp can make out on $100.00 per month why can't the other county officials make out on that amount. If Mr. Pitts wants to serve his Masters, the people who elected him, let him introduce a bill when the Legislature meets in extra session, and get a law passed putting all of Chilton County's officials on $100.00 salary per month.

And also put the same cut to our state officials. By so doing don't you think the state could pay our school teachers, and then have plenty of money to meet all present obligations of the state, and would put us farmers, laborers and officials nearer on an equality, which would make us think more of each other, and would be in line with the epistle 1 Paul's command, that we should not esteem one above the other.

Mr. Voter, what are you going to do? Are you going to vote to amend the constitution of your state in order to give the Pharaohs and Ceasars of Alabama a constitutional right to levy and collect more taxes from the already crushed taxpayers of Alabama? If there is a single farmer or laboring man in the State of Alabama that is in favor of any of the proposed amendments that are to be voted on in the next few months, will you please give your reasons for being in favor of any one of them.

In conclusion I want to challenge any farmer or laborer to show where he would get any benefit whatever to vote for the proposed amendments. But to the contrary, to vote for them will add to your present poverty, more nakedness, depression, and hunger.

But the Caesars and Pharaohs of Alabama would get the benefit.

Respectfully,
A. A. JACKSON,
Lomax, Ala.

JUDSON STROCK WRITES OF VISIT TO JUDGE ADAMS

"Perhaps a goodly number of our Chilton County folks would like to hear from Judge Adams. I visited him at the Masonic Home a few days ago, and he asked me to write the folks through the paper for him.

"First, I will say it's a mighty good home. There are over 400 men, women and children there. I ate with them. They had a good dinner and everything looked nice.

Judge Adams is in a building where some others are who need special attention. The nurse who has charge of the building impressed me as a splendid lady and sympathetic, sensible and up on her job. But, Brother Adams says it is lonely there. He told me he was very lonely. He wished to see more of his old friends up here. The nurse informed me that the folks were not visiting there as much as they had. She said, "It might be it makes them feel bad." The Master once said, "I was sick and in prison and ye visited me not."

He asked about a good many of his old friends and said he wished he could get back up here and see them all.

I found Bro. Adams the same man as of old except he is sick. He has the same aspirations and it hurts him that he cannot be out in life and at work. He spoke to me about his preaching and regrets he can not be in active church work. Let his old friends go to see him. Write him if you can't go. A few words of cheer might make a whole day brighter. Address him c|o Masonic Home.

THE COUNCIL IN JERUSALEM
Acts 15:22-19 ,
Galatians 2:1,2,9,10
Rev. Samuel D. Price, D.D.

Spiritual growth of converts was always in Paul's thinking. Derbe was visited after the stoning at Lystra. Without hesitation return was made through all the cities where awful persecutions had befallen Paul and Barnnabas on the outward journey. The purpose was to strengthen the brethren in their new-found and most precious faith. Return was made from Pamphylia direct to Antioch in Syria where full report was made to the leaders who had sent them forth.

Problems of procedure arose as full account of this first missionary journey was narrated. The older Jewish Christians insisted that in order to be a convert the rite of circumcision must be administered to a Gentile. The returned missionaries and many others insisted that this form was not necessary and the outward act was not essential to inward fanth. When agreement could not be obtained after long and even heated discussion it was decided to lay the whole matter before the mother church in Jerusalem.

It is interesting to note that as Paul and Barnabas advanced to Jerusalem they evangelized all the way. They were out to win souls for Christ and argument about procedure was only incidental.

Follow the debate in the Council at Jerusalem as you read chapter 15. Though circumcision is not mentioned the Paul party won. Findings were prepared which were taken to the church at large. There were concessions on both sides. Manner of life was to be taken into account rather than any mere form. Some of the details are rehearsed when Paul wrote the special letter to the Galatians. Read the entire epistle and note the Golden text in Galatians 5: 13. Councils have their place but real value is in the constructive work that follows.

THE GREATEST DIRIGIBLE

Soon the largest dirigible ever built, the U. S. Navy's Akron, will take to the air for a series of test flights, the result of which will be keenly interesting to the aeronautical world. This monster of the air has a gas capacity of six and a half million cubic feet, nearly twice that of the Graf Zeppelin.

The Akron is 785 feet long, with a greatest diameter of 133 feet. Eight engines will develop 4,480 horse power, and a maximum speed of 84 miles an hour. At ordinary crusing speed the ship will be able to travel 10,000 miles without refueling. It will exert a gross lift of about 200 tons, and carry a useful load of about 90 tons. Equipment will include a number of small airplanes and several rapid-fire guns.

In view of the disasters which have attended the operation of dirigibles in the past, it is natural to speculate on the Akron's fate. One has only to recall the destruction of the American ZR-2, Roma and Shenandoah; the British R-101 and six other large dirigibles, the French Dixmude, the Italian Italia, and many others, to realize how few dirigibles, even those of the improved types of recent years, have survived for any great length of time.

The first dirigible diaster in the United States, by the way, was the explosion of one named the Akron, in 1912. Let us hope that the new Akron may have better luck.

SEEKS THE LIFE SPARK

Studies in biology and bio-chemistry have developed many astounding facts, many of which have been of inestimable value to mankind but the ultimate goal of such research is to find the secret of the life spark itself, and produce it from inert matter.

That this will some day be accomplished is the belief of many distinguished scientists, although this idea is flouted by those who hold to the traditional belief in the creation of all life by special acts of a Supreme Being

Prof. William Lash Miller, internationally known bio-chemist of the University of Toronto, has produced in his laboratory a component part of living matter, and his accomplishment is hailed as one of epochal importance by many fellow-scientists.

Just what significance may be attached to Prof. Miller's latest discovery is somewhat dificult for a layman to judge, but it appears that it may mark a most important step toward the solution of the age-old question What is life?

CONSTITUTION DAY

September 17 marks the144th anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States by the constitutional convention in Philadelphia after nearly four months of deliberations.

In recent years Constitution Day has been widely observer through suitable exercises by schools, clubs and patriotic societies. It is only the truth to say that the average American is by no means as familiar with this great document as he ought to be. The wisdom and foresight of its authors have been amply vindicated throughout the life of the nation.

One of the highest tributes ever paid the Constitution was by the emient British statesman, Viscount James Bryce, who in his American Commonwealth said:

"The Constitution deserves the veneration with which Americans have been accustomed to regard it. It ranks above every other written constitution for the intrinsic excelence of its scheme, its adaptation to the circumstances of the people, the simplicity, brevity and precision of its language, its judicious mixture of definiteness in principle with elasticity in details."

Every citizen should read the Constitution at least once a year, and Constitution Dayy is an appropriate time to do it.

Some political prophets are taking Mr. Coolidge's recent silence seriously.

Youngsters also might be urged to plow under every third row of their wild oats.

The Nye committee may finally get around to an investigation of the Hayes-Tilden campaign.

"All should learn to drive a car." says an advertisement. Especially a lot of ginks who are driving now.

Russia will now pay workers according to their ability. Some of us should be thankful we're not Russians.

Washington's 200th anniversary will be celebrated next year by people who voted away the liberty he gave us.

A score of plans have been proposed for raising the price of cotton. Farmers would be satisfied with one that would work.

Why risk your neck for $4.98*

SOONER or later worn tires are going to let go. That may be dangerous.

Honestly now, is it worth taking the chance of going into a ditch or having a smash-up due to a blowout, when you can get fine new Goodyears like these for so little money?

If you have any doubts about the condition of your tires, drive in. We will look them over and give you the low-down. You can believe what we say — we couldn't afford to be anything but on the level. We know that as well as you do.

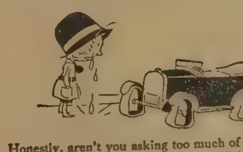
CAN YOUR WIFE CHANGE A TIRE?



Honestly, aren't you asking too much of Fate to trust those old tires when your wife drives? Hailing strangers for help, if she has a puncture, is often disagreeable. Science And Honor

According to Maxwell Halsey, Traffic Engineer of the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters, science, by producing the modern high speed automobile and smooth highways, has contributed to the accident situation. Therefore, Mr. Halsey reasons, it is up to science to tender first aid in remedying the situation. Among his suggestions to reduce the casualty list, which this year may total 35,000 deaths and 1,000,000 injuries, are:

1. Improvement in street and highway design. The highway of the future must make it difficult for the motorist to have an accident.
2. State and local traffic ordinances must be coordinated so that there will be full cooperation and fixed responsibility.
3. Correct utilization of signs, markings, beacons, signals, etc., can do much to increase safety.
4. Motor laws must be enforced to the maximum possible degree
5. The public must change its present attitude of indifference toward automobile accidents. If it looked upon the reckless driver as an outlaw, our streets and highways would immediately become safer.

These are sound suggestions that states and municipalities would do well to follow. It is their duty to do the material things necessary to reduce accidents, exactly as it is the duty of the individual driver to operate his car in a careful and prudent manner. Safer highways, better enforcement of modern laws and a new public attitude toward recklessness—an "honor code" among drivers—these are strong weapons with which to fight the automobile accident menace.

Faith In Advertising

Too many advertisers are no-believers. They like seeing their names and their goods in print, they feel that "maybe" it helps, certainly it doesn't hurt. They are glad to advertise when times are good and a little extravagance and display seem justified.

But do they believe that their advertising is an essential part of their business, as essential as the machines that make their product or the salesmen who call on customers? Not a bit. Advertising is the first thing to go overboard, followed perhaps by the last new "vice president in charge of this-and-that."

What advertising needs is more converts to the faith who feel that their advertising is not an emotional outburst, but part of their long time plans to grow through better selling of better goods—not a thing lightly to be discarded or interrupted.

But if advertising needs more converts, perhaps it needs also more evangelists to preach the true faith.

Said an able manufacturer:

"The hardest thing to do with an advertising manager is to keep him from spending all his money when times are good and make him save it for bad times when it's really needed."

Times are bad, but already they show signs of becoming better. When they are really good, can advertising men direct some of their great abilities to making true believers of those in the pews who are enjoying the music and displaying their new clothes?—Nation's Business.

The Greatest Man of His Time

Sixty years ago a young telegraph operator named Thomas A. Edison invented a method of sending messages in both directions at once on a telegraph wire. It was the most marvelous human invention up to that time. The young man got $100,000 for his patent, which was a fortune in those days.

He began experimenting with other electrical inventions, and before the Centennial of 1876 his name was a household word all over the world. He invented, among other things, the waxed paper in which the package groceries you buy are wrapped. He invented the mimeograph, the first successful duplicating process. Sholes, first inventor of the typewriter, came to Edison with his crude model and Edison taught him how to make it work. Professor Bell had the idea of talking over a wire; Edison's invention of the carbon transmitter made the telephone a success. Dr. Brush invented the electric arc light; Edison conceived the idea of putting electric lights in small units into bottles, and invented the incandescent lamp. In the course of his telephone experiments he invented the phonograph. A little later he invented the movies. In between he invented new and economical methods of producing cement and developed the electric storage battery.

It is not too much to say of Edison that his inventions have revolutionized the world. They have changed our manner of living, our habits of thought, our whole scheme of things within one man's lifetime. His active brain never stopped working.

The great electrical wizard's serious illness at 84 has again focused the eyes of the world upon him. We hope that he will recover his health and keep on working until he is a hundred. The world cannot afford to lose Thomas A. Edison.

---by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

As a matter of expectations from my readers, I am disposed to comment this week on several acquaintances of mine, some of whom I will name, while in order to protect the peace and dignity of this column and to preserve my hide, I will omit the names of others. That is merely showing an amount of discretion, or horse sense, or something on my part.

Clanton's J. Lee Smith, the Mayor of preserved dignity in our midst, and a man of extreme modesty has something about that friendly smile of his that causes one to think for a moment just what he means by it. Perhaps it is nothing more than natural, but it's a good smile and he should display it more generously.

Bob Sumner, elder, has shown some real executive ability in his manipulations of the workings of the Clanton Golf Club, and of course with his two charming daughters and handsome son, show that Bob can be other things as well as play golf and sell Woco-Pep.

The rather striking young lady, a brunette, I have in mind seems to have forgotten a promise she made me about a year ago. I somewhat regret to have to remind her of it. Maybe she will be sport enough to "cough up."

You could have knocked me over with a horse feather one afternoon recently when one of our charming school teachers accosted me downtown to say she was glad to see me, and to give me some advice. She didn't realize that she stirred within me a desire that had been quiet since school was out last year.

Mon Wyatt, whose name goes hand in hand with the name Firestone in this section, has been "along the road" so far as credits and collections are concerned, and it is interesting to hear of some business experiences he has gone through.

There's nothing like being a good sport even tho one is hard boiled and dignified in business. Clanton has several men of this type and I admire them for it.

I understand that Judge Reynolds says there are too many politicians trying to politic in things, and yet he seemed to be politicing at the cotton meeting last Saturday. You ought not to get off the given subject so much Judge, it makes it difficult to understand just what you are really trying to talk about. For awhile it must have been difficult for the people to determine whether you were making a political speech or explaining the cotton plan.

And something else, you spoke of how broke the schools of the county are. Well, as a civil question, didn't the educational system of the county lose a neat amount of money from the State by the action of the Commissioners Court in cutting out the Welfare Dept. here Oh well, you be the Judge.

Clanton's postmaster, W. M. Bean, and his assistants, Jack Bean and Sutley, are three of those unusually accomodating fellows. Of course they don't line up with me politically, but nevertheless they are fine fellows.

The recently discovered fascinating blonde young lady of a couple of months ago is almost becoming a disappointment to me. Being, at times, that strictly feminine type with long hair, beautiful eyes and charming ways, I was about to become entangled in her web. Why is it that the,—thought to be somewhat old-fashioned, turns out to be ultra-modern? The type I don't care for so much. There I was so thoroughly contented with her presence, the moon throwing its soft rays through the branches of the tall oaks, the picturesque bird house and landscaping out front—everything so quiet. Then she turns out so differently. But as the Raven quoteth, "Nevermore," and so it goes.

Now, it looks as if I am in for a hot time now, from what the Great Dooker Pooker is writing about—but don't fear dear readers, I'm going to see this Maud Lynn and use the Pucker on her—watch her fall.

Dear Mr. Doug:

The great Dooker Pooker visited me today, and ordered me to mail the enclosed to you. As is fitting and proper, I hasten to obey His Majesty.

MAUD LYNN.

"Dear Doug:

"I recently referred to you, as Chilton County's Certified Critter-sizer, a young lady by the name of Mattie Gascar, of Clanton, who, unable to herself win the heart and hand of Dick Taitor, also of Clanton, sought my aid.

"Well, Doug, I have just received notice of suit brought by said Taitor versus you and me, for alienatin' the affections of said Gascar. It seems that when you sprung the Dooker Pooker Pucker on Miss Gascar, she fell in love with you and lost further interest in Mr. Taitor, altho she did proceed to use the Pucker on him and of course he fell for her.

"Now Doug, a kitty-kat will catch little mouses all day long just for the fun of it, not ceasin' her slaughter when her tummy gets filled up; and while I dislike to liken kitty-kats to wimmin, or vice worser or something, it is plain that Miss Gascar's action here was deliberately premediated for no other purpose than the fun of killin', because she has since denied victim Taitor her company.

"As the matter now stands, Dick's heart is bleedin' because of his hopeless love for Mattie and Mattie is weepin' because she wants you. Dick has hired Maud Lynn to sue us and Maudy seems to think we have damaged said Taitor to the extent of One Hundred Thousand Dollars altho I'll bet we could settle for one dollar cash.

"I think our defense should be vigorous. As for me one dollar for defense but not one penny for tribute. Let's get together and make said Lynn trimble in her boot."

FOOD

Henery Ford's order that every married man employed in his Iron Mountain plant must plant a vegetable garden next year is an interesting experiment which will be critized by several different kinds of people. Commission men and dealers in garden produce will see in it a possible loss of good markets. And the people who think that an employer has no right to dictate to his employees about anything except their actual work in the factory will regard this order as an invasion of the individual worker's rights.

My own view is that the results of the Iron Mountain experiment, if records are carefully kept, as I assume they will be, may prove to be the most powerful stimulus to the general movement away from the cities and back to the economic independence of the small landholder who raises most of what he and his family consume.

WORK

In my home county, Berkshire, Massachusetts, there are three important industries. One of the General Electric's manufacturing plants is at Pittsfield, the county seat—or as the oldtimers call it, the "shire town." Nearly all the writing paper used in America is made in the mills along the Housatonic river, including the paper on which the Federal Government prints money and bonds. And the limestone quarries of Lee, Adams and West Stockbridge in good years pay the New Haven railroad a quarter of a million dollars in freight charges on building and agricultural lime.

None of these industries is running on full time these days, but we see and hear little evidence of anything approaching real distress. One of my nearest neighbors has eleven children at home, three more married. He works in a paper mill when it is running, sells the milk from ten cows through the local branch of the Dairymen's League, grows feed for the cows and a pen of pigs on his hundred acres, besides cutting enough cordwood every winter to keep his house warm. He is a lot better off than the city worker who has nothing to fall back on.

ENGLAND

The fall of the Labor Government in England and the desertion of the Labor Party by Ramsay McDonald and other leaders does not necessarily mean the end of the Socialist movement in Great Britain, but it does mean that the effort to force social and economic changes faster than they can be paid for has failed. The trouble with almost every movement for social reform is that its proponents want to change everything instantly.

Great Britain's new Government is pledged to balance the budget—that is, to cut down governmental expenses to a point where the income from all forms of taxation will meet them. That will slow up such reforms as employment insurance and the national housing program, but it will keep England out of bankruptcy and help restore world trade, which in the long run probably will be just as beneficial for the workers. It takes more than one generation to change the course of social progress.

THRIFT

The president of the largest savings bank in America is advising his 240,000 depositors to stop hoarding up their money, to draw it out and spend it for things which they will need later and which they can buy cheaper now than at any time since the war. That is good advice. True thrift consists not in hoarding cash but in spending wisely. There never was, and probably will not again be for a long time, a better opportunity to buy a home, for example, or the equipment and furnishings of a home, or any of the other necessary things which do not lose their value with the passage of time. And every dollar spent now hastens the day when the dollars will again circulate freely.

AGE

The average American is older than he used to be. Twenty years ago our average national age was about twenty-three; now it is about twenty-seven. Not so many children, grown-ups living longer.

This change is bound to be refleced in every phase of life. We will tend to take a more reasoned, less emotional view of social, political and economic matters, for example. We probably will lose as a nation some of the pioneering, adventurous spirit of youth. We will grow to value security more than excitement. There were boys of twenty-one among the leaders of our Revolution, the signers of our Declaration of Independence, the drafters of our Constitution. Today we look on a man of thirty as rather too young for the serious responsibilities of government. We are in danger of becoming stodgy and conservative, as a nation, unless more young men forge their way to the front as political leaders.

CHINA'S AWFUL FLOOD

After being ravaged for years by brigandage and revolution, unhappy China is now suffering from the most devastating flood in all history. We in America can not begin to grasp the horror of the situation, where literally millions are dead already from drowning, starvation and exposure, while other millions are doomed beyond the possibility of aid.

Even when the floods subside those who survive the initial disaster will be faced by the horrors of famine. The President of China estimates that fifty million will perish from starvation and disease in spite of anything that may possibly be done to save them.

The fall crops, never sufficient for the people's needs, have been destroyed, as well as nearly all the livestock. With winter coming on there is no chance for raising new crops this year. Even where late sowing might be possible the people have no seed, nor farm animals with which to till the soil.

It has been suggested that some small measure of relief might be afforded these stricken people by selling surplus American wheat to China on liberal credit terms. It seems that this should be done by all means. It would not only aid China but would relieve our own situation without disturbing our regular markets. The Farm Board should act on this suggestion and act quickly.

News from Thorsby

Miss EDITH JOHNSON, Correspondent

We are informed by Mayor Petersen that several people around the business section of Thorsby have complained that mosquitoes have been more troublesome recently than for some years past. He advises that all those who are troubled—in fact all the people should investigate the matter—should examine the sanitary toilets installed about a year ago. Read your printed instructions—if water is standing in any pits, they are very apt to become breeding places for mosquitoes. A free and proper use of kerosene will rid us of the pest very soon. Also, are there any weeds around your lot, and any old cans thrown away? Clean up without waiting for official orders.

CHEVROLET From the selection of raw materials to the completion of the finished Chevrolet product, each process of building, assembling and checking the Chevrolet Six is marked by extreme care and precision. An exhaustive system of test and inspection makes certain that every part meets specified dimensions exactly. Many of these parts are held to limits of one ten-thousandth of an inch. No manufacturer in the industry uses more care or precision in building and testing than Chevrolet.

Just as every part of the car is soundly built, every feature is soundly designed.

In planning the motor, Chevrolet engineers were not content to offer the public anything less than tried and proved design. They knew that the only satisfactory way to get smooth, flexible power in a car is to use at least six cylinders. So they adopted the six-cylinder engine without compromise. And this is what you get in today's Chevrolet Six.

As a result of this sound designing and sound manufacturing, you can buy a Chevrolet and know you are getting a genuinely good automobile—soundly designed, soundly built, basically and technically right.

A Clanton Sunset

By Mary Lou Tiffin

The sun slowly sinking below the western horizon drags behind it its coat of many colors. The train of its spectacular garment trails majestically across the sky. It seems that the Creator has whimsically symbolized life itself in the slowly fading colors. The gold suggests the fame, glory and the pomp of life lingering, reluctant to leave. The rose and violet modestly proclaim the humbler, yet perhaps the happier side of that thing called life. And over all, tinting all the grayish blue casts its sombre note.

The trees standing against the wondrous heaven, seem fairly to glitter with the intense beauty of nature. Around each tiny branch nestles a halo, the crowning touch of the Master Painter. As our side of the earth follows its course slowly and reluctantly, the majestic beauty of the sun is hidden from view. With the departure of the radiant light, "The world is left to darkness and to me."

Alabama Cotton Has Bigger Value

Auburn, Ala.,—Through the county agents of the state the warning is being sent from Auburn to Alabama farmers about the sale of cotton this fall. Certain varieties have produced a staple which brings a preminum and sales should be made on this basis.

Last spring the D. P. L. variety was planted in north and central Alabama. With favorable weather it has produced a staple of 1 inch to 1 1-16 inches in length. One-inch staple, early in September, was worth 3.50 per bale more than 7-8 - inch staple; and 1 1-16-inch staple was worth $5.25 per bale more than 7-8 inch staple.

These facts were gathered by district agent J. T. High and distributed by county agents to farmers who grew this variety this year. At the same time they were able to keep their seed pure this fall for planting next spring.

In order to keep them pure, gin days were being observed in a large number of communities. The goal in many counties is to be free of inferior staple or low-yielding varieties by 1933. County agents are leading movements with this as their goal.

"I'm glad we have a Telephone again"

A number of people who gave up their telephones during the stress of the past twelve months have told us that this proved to be false economy and they have had their service restored.

Those who have not had their service reinstalled, and those who may be hesitating about having a telephone of their own, are reminded that telephone service is no longer regarded as an expense, but is considered a necessary home convenience and economy.

No other money you spend can bring you more actual value. Thousands of telephone subscribers know the truth of this. They do not consider their telephone statement as a "bill," but rather as a reminder of pleasanter living and broadened opportunities.

Those who have previously enjoyed telephone service appreciate it more than ever; new subscribers wonder how they ever did without it.

Telephone service costs so little and the advantages are so many that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

CHAPTER XLV

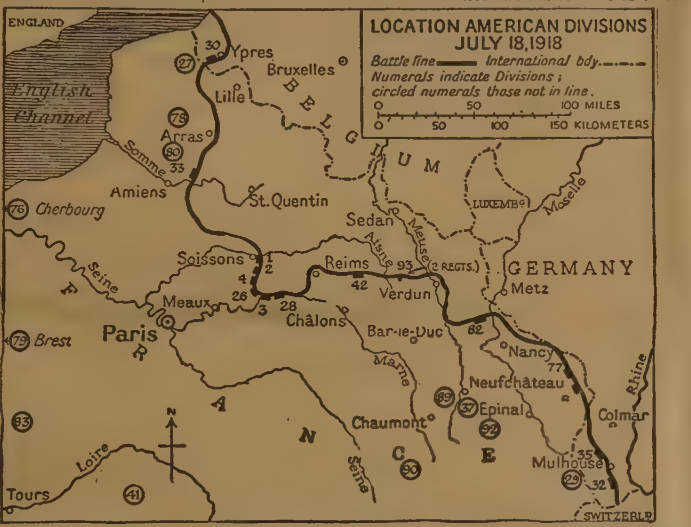
The Second division assumed the offensive June 6, 1918, and began a series of attacks which culminated some three weeks later in the capture of the last German positions in the Bois de Belleau by its marine brigade and of Vaux by its regular brigade.

The fighting during most of this period was of peculiar intensity. The German lines were favorably located on commanding ground and were made more formidable by the extensive use of machine guns, especially in Belleau wood.

In the initial advance Harbord's marine brigade captured Bouresches, and Lewis' regular brigade took Triangle farm and Bois de la Barette. During the next few days our troops progressed piecemeal. June 15 the Seventh infantry, Third division, arrived to reinforce the marine brigade engaged in the wood. This regiment relieved the brigade on that date and the marines were rested for a week, when they again entered the line. Against stubborn resistance, they drove the enemy from the wood June 25.

Regulars Capture Vaux.

Meanwhile the regular brigade continued its attacks intermittently, and July 1, with great dash, captured Vaux and the Bois de la Roche. The operations of the division in this vicinity were practically at an end when the new lines were stabilized on the high ground captured from the enemy.



The casualties in the division were about 9,500. More than 1,000 prisoners were captured from the enemy.

The gains by the Second division were won with little aid on either flank by the French units, which were still in poor shape, and were made against an enemy determined to crush this early American effort. The success of this division and of the First at Cantigny and the Third on the Marne, following as they did the crisis of May 27, were loudly acclaimed by the French, and for the time being had a very stimulating effect upon French morale.

With the transfer of activities to the French front northeast of Paris, our plan to build up an American corps near Amiens had become impracticable, and as I had offered General Petain the services of our divisions wherever they might be needed it now appeared possible to form at least a corps and possibly an army somewhere along the Marne salient.

U. S. Divisions Relieve French.

I had suggested that we should bring other divisions to join the Second and Third for that purpose, and accordingly the Twenty-Sixth and Forty-second were relieved from the inactive Vosges front, and five American divisions from the British area were designated to be sent to that quiet sector to relieve French divisions. The assembly of four American divisions in aid of the French on that front would more than offset their recent losses.

General Petain, in his letter accepting my offer, said in part:

"I must express my deep gratitude for the prompt and very important aid you are bringing in the present crisis. The American troops already engaged in the battle are the unanimous admiration of the whole French army. The power of the effort which your country is at present showing, as well as the resolute and generous spirit with which you enter the struggle, is for the allies—and above all for France—a comfort in the grave times through which we are passing, and a pledge of hope for the future."

What if Paris Should Fall?

Leaving the suggestion with General Petain, without further discussion, I returned to Paris, arriving June 8. The next morning I called on Premier Clemenceau, and on that morning the fourth phase of the great German offensive started between Montdidier and the Oise. Reports indicated that it was meeting considerable success.

Mentioning this to M. Clemenceau, I asked him what he thought would be the result if Paris should fall.

M. Clemenceau replied that he and Mr. Lloyd George had considered that possibility, and had reached the conclusion they would do everything in their power to save Paris, but if it should be lost they would go on fighting.

"Above Paris is France," he added, "and above France is civilization."

As I was leaving he came to the door with me, and I said: "It may not look encouraging just now, but we are certain to win in the end." He clung to my hand and in a tone that showed the utmost solicitude he replied: "Do you really think that? I am glad to hear you say it."

This was the first and only time that I ever sensed any misgiving in the mind of this resolute man. Notwithstanding our occasional rather heated discussions on the use to be made of American troops, I admired him greatly. It always seemed to me he represented the true spirit of confidence and courage of the French people.

I then motored to General Foch's headquarters at Bombon. We considered my proposal to form an American corps near Chateau Thierry, to which he readily agreed. He spoke especially of the fine work of our troops.

I asked how a German drive which threatened or perhaps captured Paris would affect the armies and the people. His reply was almost word for word like M. Clemenceau's. They had evidently discussed the possibility of losing Paris. He, too, was certain the armies would go on with the war. Foch spoke so positively and with such evident feeling that I was moved to get up and shake his hand.

Concentrate West of Marne.

Meanwhile the Fourth and Twenty-eighth divisions, en route from the British front to the northeast of France were stopped at General Foch's request in the vicinity of Villers Cotterets, the object being to concentrate several of our divisions on the west of the Marne salient, primarily as a precaution against another German offensive there, but ultimately for possible use on the offensive. The Second, Third, Twenty-sixth and Forty-second were in that area and with the Fourth and Twenty-eighth there was a force equivalent to twelve French divisions, although some of these units were without artillery.

An encouraging circumstance at the moment was the success of the French in holding Von Hutier's attack on the Montdidier-Noyon front. This fourth phase of the German offensive was an effort not only to widen the vulnerable Marne pocket but to secure the railway between Compeigne and Soissons and open the way to Paris.

The anniversary of the arrival of our advance contingent in France was the occasion of many congratulations on the part of the French.

CHAPTER XLVI

The demands for American divisions were pressing. The First, second and Third had already become actively engaged, the First being slated to go to the reserve near the Chateau Thierry salient when relieved from Cantigny. The Second was still in line at Belleau wood, and the Third south of the Marne.

General Foch had asked for five of the divisions recently arrived that were training with the British. Of these the Fourth and Twenty-eighth, while en route to the quiet Vosges sector to relieve French divisions, had been diverted to the reserve near the western face of the Marne salient.

The Thirty-fifth moved to the vicinity of Epinal and the Seventy-seventh was about to enter the trenches in the Baccarat sector to replace the Forty-second, which was to reinforce Gouraud's army east of Rheims. The Eighty-second had started for the Toul sector to relieve the Twenty-sixth, which in turn was soon to relieve the Second.

Thus there were three American divisions in quiet sectors and seven either in the battle line or held in readiness to meet any eventuality which might result from further activity of the Germans in the great wedge they had driven toward Paris.

British Displeased.

The British were displeased at the transfer of our divisions from their area, claiming priority to retain them by reason of having brought them over. When General Foch inquired of the conditions under which these troops were serving with the British, my reply made it clear that he had entire authority to direct where they should go in the emergency, as without it the theory of a supreme command would fail.

The rapid succession of German offensives had seriously crippled the allies, and not only materially reduced their powers of resistance but had depressed their morale and caused the darkest misgivings among them. They grew more and more fearful lest the enemy might still have untold reserves ready to swell his forces. That the morale of the allies was low was shown by the conclusions of many of their soldiers returning from the front to the rest areas.

Reports from the British front were no better. Their troops continuously told our men who were with them for training that we had come too late and that our entry into the battle would only postpone allied defeat. This attitude seemed so alarming that I took steps to prevent such a spirit from affecting our army by promptly reporting the facts to allied authorities. The presence of such sentiments was another important reason for opposing any form of amalgamation.

Vastness of Request Unrealized.

Far short had we fallen of the expectations of the preceding November, when Foch, General Robertson of the British, and I had joined in an urgent appeal for twenty-four trained American divisions by the following June. It is small wonder that the allies were now so insistent in urging increased and continuous shipments of men, trained or untrained.

So serious was the situation regarded that it was no longer a demand for twenty-four divisions but for one hundred. It is probable that the vastness of this request was not fully realized, or else the allies had greatly exaggerated ideas of our power of accomplishment, surprising as it actually proved to be.

A brief calculation of these demands of the prime ministers showed that they were asking more than 2,500,000 combatant troops by the following spring, which, augmented by those required for the services of supply, conservatively calculated for a well-balanced force situated in a foreign country under the circumstances that surrounded us, would amount at least to 4,000,000 men.

The American combatant force would thus have equaled 200 divisions of the allies, and their apprehension may be imagined when we realize that this was greater by one-fourth than the combined allied armies of 162 divisions then on the western front.

Saw 3,000,000 as Limit.

Although no such number as this could have been considered feasible, as it is unlikely that it could have been either transported, equipped or supplied, it was necessary, in view of the situation, to lay plans for bringing over all we could. After giving the question careful study, it seemed to me that 3,000,000 men would be the limit we could hope to reach by the spring of 1919.

This, roughly, would provide at least sixty-six or possibly over seventy combatant divisions, the rest being necessary for the noncombatant service. As we had hitherto made estimates based upon a total force of 2,000,000 men, it was quite imperative that calculations should be made on the increased basis and that work everywhere in the A. E. F. should now have that end in view.

A cable I sent June 21 set forth the reasons for fixing the program for the future definitely at 3,000,000 men as a minimum, and urged upon the War department the utmost effort to meet our immediate requirements for the expansion of port facilities and railroads. A detailed study of the troop shipments and tonnage required was included. My cable closed:

"There is nothing so dreadfully important as winning this war, and every possible resource should be made immediately available. Mr. Secretary, the question is so vital to our country and the necessity of winning the war is so great that there is no limit to which we should not go to carry out the plan I have outlined for the next ten months, and we must be prepared to carry it on still further after that at the same rate or maybe faster."

CHAPTER XLVII

The Thirty-second, Thirty-fifth, Forty-second and Seventy-seventh divisions were now in training under the recently organized Third corps. Especial effort was being made to hasten their preparation in both staff and line in anticipation of an early call for more serious service.

I inspected these troops June 19-22, 1918, and my impressions were favorable, although a number of officers were found unfamiliar with the principles of tactical leadership. In such hastily trained units this was hardly surprising, especially in view of the known defects of the instruction at home.

Many were found with but slight appreciation of the natural defensive possibilities of a given position. Some battalion and even regimental commanders had not thought to ascertain the exact location of their front lines, and of course had failed to work out the details of preparation against a possible attack.

My predilection for detailed instruction in minor tactics, growing out of my personal supervision of training in both small and large units, led me quickly to discover deficiencies.

My diary notes the establishment of the military board of allied supply at this time, June 22, 1918. It was expected to study questions of supply and adopt proper measures for the co-ordination of allied resources and utilities.

Col. Charles G. Dawes, who had charge in a more limited sphere of the co-ordination of our own supply departments, was detailed as the American member of the board.

Lauds Courage of Negro Troops.

Cables from the War department June 22 stated that the colored people at home were being told that negro soldiers in France were always placed in the most dangerous positions, being sacrificed to save white troops, and were often left on the field to die without medical attention. It was not difficult to guess the origin of this sort of propaganda. As a matter of fact, none of these troops had been in line except in quiet sectors. Those I had recently seen were in fine spirits and seemed keen for active service.

The only colored combat troops in France were those of the Ninety-second division, then in a quiet sector in the Vosges, and the four infantry regiments of the Ninety-third, each attached to a French division. Several individuals serving with the French had already received the croix de guerre for conduct in raids.

Clemenceau at Chaumont.

Prime Minister Clemenceau, General Foch and M. Andre Tardieu, with Generals Weygand and Mordacq, came to Chaumont June 23, 1918, for a conference on the increase of American man power.

M. Clemenceau's popularity in France was probably at its height. As this was his first visit to Chaumont the people turned out en masse, crowded into the plaza and gave him a rousing welcome. His reception within the hotel de ville by the officials, civil and military, was marked by eloquent speeches. In his remarks M. Clemenceau gave the people every encouragement, making special reference to the increasing forces the Americans were sending over.

As we were leaving the widowed mother of a missing soldier, her only son, came up in great distress and told M. Clemenceau of her sorrow. He spoke tenderly of her patriotic sacrifice, put his arm gently around her and kissed her cheeks, mingling his tears with hers. The pathos of this touched every heart.

As General Foch and the others were not arriving until later, M. Clemenceau and I, driving together, accompanied by Generals Wirbel and Ragueneau in a separate automobile, went to the headquarters of the Eighty-third division, Major General Glenn commanding, which was billeted at Montigny, not far from Chaumont. We fell to discussing the probable situation of the various allied countries and their relative standing after the war. M. Clemenceau went to some length in his conjectures.

Thought Britain Finished.

"Great Britain is finished and in my opinion she has seen the zenith of her glory," he said.

"What makes you think so, Mr. Prime Minister?" I asked.

"First of all," he replied, "the immense drain of the war will make it impossible for her to retain commercial supremacy, and, second, the experience of her colonial troops in this war will make their people more independent and she will lose her control over them."

I could not agree with M. Clemenceau's view and said: "Mr. Prime Minister, I think you are mistaken about the British, and I believe we shall see her fully recover from the effects of the war."

Continuing, I asked: "What about France's future?"

"Ah! She will once more be the dominant power in Europe," he replied.

"But you do not mention Germany," I reminded him.

He replied: "The Germans are a great people, but Germany will not regain her prestige and her influence for generations."

Discuss Troop Shipments.

Shortly after our return to Chaumont, Generals Foch and Weygand arrived and after lunch we all went into conference. The continuation of shipments up to one hundred divisions, as already recommended by the prime ministers, Lloyd George, Clemenceau, and Orlando, formed the basis of French argument.

The whole subject was thoroughly discussed, and, considering the then shortage of man power claimed by the French and British, to say nothing of the possible increase of the German armies from Russian sources, the main question was to get over as many Americans as possible. It was finally agreed that we should propose an eighty-division program to be completed by April, 1919, and add to it the larger program of one hundred divisions to be completed by July, 1919.

ALABAMA FARM CROPS ARE WORTH $131,500,000

Alabama farmers are this year producing approximately $131,500,000 worth of field crops, according to the September crop report released yesterday by F. W. Gist, agricultural statistician for the Department of Agriculture, who reported this value to be "approximately $20,000,000 less than the harvest of 1930." The total of farm crops in Alabama last year was $151,519,000.

"At present prices the cotton crop in sight will be worth about $33,000,000 less than the crop of last year, while other field crops promise an increase in value of about $13,000,000," he said.

"This increase is based on somewhat lower unit prices for all commodities, and hence means that the volume of production this year is considerably greater than last year."

Indications on September 1st were that Alabama farmers will this year produce 1,288,000 bales of cotton; 40,724,000 bushels of corn; 583,000 tons of hay; 6,072,000 bushels of peanuts; 9,360,000 of sweet potatoes; 4,202,000 bushels of oats; 4,389,000 bushels of Irish potatoes; 5,310,000 gallons of syrup; 3,400,000 pounds of pecans and 1,530,000 bushels of peaches. This is an increase in all these crops.

CONTROL OF INSECTS IN DRIED FRUITS

Fruits of all kinds have been produced in abundance this year. Every effort should be made to save all of these food materials in some way. A very easy and popular method of keeping apples and peaches, at least, is to dry them. There is one disadvantage to curing fruits in this way. Quite often the dried fruit becomes infested with worms. These worms are most likely to be the larvae of the Indian meal moth or one of the dried fruit beetles. We are not so much concerned with what the insect is as we are about the methods of control. Suffice it to say that any pest found in dried fruits can be controlled by heat or by fumigating with carbon disulphie.

In the use of heat for the control of worms in dried fruit it is impossible to give very definite instructions. It is the opinion of the writer, however, that fruit spread in a thin layer on a piece of metal roofing and covered with a second piece of metal or glass and kept in the sun for several hours will result in the death of any insects present. Fruit spread out in thin layers and placed in the over of the stove for three or four hours should give good control. The temperature in the oven should be kept at 150 degrees Fahrenheit.

Carbon disulphide (high life) is an inexpensive fumigant that will give good control of insects in any kind of dried food. Altho it has a very pungent odor it can be used without injury to the food materials treated. Carbon disulphide gives off a gas that is heavier than air. For that reason the fruit or other materials to be fumigated should be placed in cans, boxes, or barrels that are tight enough to hold water. Otherwise, the gas will leak out before the insects are killed. Place the desired amount of high life in a shallow container, such as a tin plate, and place it on top of the fruit. Close the container and leave it undisturbed for thirty-six hours.

For one peck of dried fruit use 3 tablespoonfuls of high life. For one-half bushel, use one-half teacup of high life. For one bushel, use one teacup full of high life. For larger quantities, use eight to ten pounds of high life per 1000 cubic feet of air space. Treat when the air temperature is 70 degrees Fahrenheit or above.

FERTILIZER FACTS ISSUED BY AUBURN

Auburn, Ala.—As a result of experiments conducted, the Experiment Station of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, is now recommending that farmers use either basic slag or superphosphate in fertilizing either winter legumes or summer legumes. Basic slag is preferable to superphosphate, and more of it is being used each year in this way. It is a by-product of the steel industry of Birmingham.

Either 600 ounds of basic slag or 400 pounds of superphosphate is the Alabama recommendation for hairy vetch, Austrian peas, and other winter legumes; and also such summer legumes as soygeans and cowpeas.

For winter legumes basic slag has two advantages. They are: (1) The lime content, and (2) the fact that basic slag is not injurious to inoculation, as is true of superphosphate. In using superphosphate the seed must be kept away from the fertilizer. If allowed to come in contact the inoculation will be killed.

The time may come when basic slag will be used as a fertilizer for crops other than legume. The Alabama Experiment Station has obtained good results with it as a fertilizer for cotton when cotton was produced as a part of a rotation in which legumes were used. As yet these experiments are not considered conclusive and are being continued.

Clanton Methodist Church

D. W. Haskew, Pastor

For more than nine months I have called upon the people in Clanton, thru the columns of your paper to worship every Sunday. I do not see that the appeals have done much good, but still I am using every means within my reach to create a church loyalty. There is coming a day when the sorrow of your life will be that you did not do as I have begged you. Will you not attend church next Sunday, morning and night? Why not? Will your answer stand the test of the Judgment?

At 11 A. M. we want you to hear "Comradeship with the Carpenter." At night we want you to hear an Evangelistic sermon.

We want every Departmental Superintendent in our Sunday school to study his and her department and know its needs. We have got to have a wide-awake, growing Sunday school, or we must forever drag a dead church.

We are delighted to welcome Miss Margarette Kendrick into our church. She comes to us from the Methodist church in Luverne. Welcome, thrice welcome.

GINNER'S COTTON LIEN LOST IF IT LEAVES HIS POS. WITH OKEH

Answering a letter from Commissioner of Agriculture Storrs, the office of Atty. Gen. Knight, has ruled that a ginner's lien on cotton is lost when the cotton leaves his possession with his consent; and is not preserved by the placing of a notation that the ginning fee is due and unpaid, on the warehouseman's receipt for the cotton.

As between a cotton warehouseman and a landlord, the landlord's lien is superior, it is stated, unless the warehouseman is a purchaser for value and without notice. The bond of a warehouseman would not be liable for payment of a ginner's lien, it is held.

The Commissioner, in his letter, said that in the past, it has been the general custom for ginning charges to be paid either in cash or deducted from the seed. At the present time, however, he continued, seed are so cheap they are bringing an average of about $1.50 a bale in excess of the charge for ginning.

"In many sections of the State," the Commissioner said, "farmers have adopted the plan of taking all of the cottonseed money to live on and allowing the ginning charges to follow the bale of cotton into the warehouse, and setting out on the warehouse receipt the amount of ginning charges against the bale." Mr. Storrs said there has been considerable inquiry concerning the details of this.

SAVE THESE FALL PIGS

With an abundant feed crop in prospect all over the county it is up to us to save every pig farrowed this fall to help consume it. Hogs are our best market for much of our feedstuff and surplus pigs will be in demand all over the State.

The following suggestions are simply to remind you of the things you should do with your sow that should farrow in the near future.

1. Fix up an individual farrowing house with guard rails and place it in a pasture away from other hogs. Clean surroundings will prevent pigs from becoming infested with worms.

2. See that your sow is free of lice before farrowing and keep her that way. Old crank case oil will do the job and can be secured at any filling station.

3. Just prior to farrowing feed the sow lightly on some laxative feed such as a wheat bran mash. A feverish condition and a lack of protein in the diet causes sows to eat pigs.

4. Clip off any "wolf or needle teeth" from new-born pigs. Sows will frequently kill pigs if this is neglected.

5. Any of the following rations will be satisfactory for the sow during the suckling period:

Ration 1. Corn (shelled or ground) 75 lbs.; wheat shorts, 13 lbs.; cottonseed meal, 7 lbs.; tankage 60%, 5 lbs.

Ration 2. Corn (shelled or ground) 1 part; skim or butter milk, 3 parts.

Ration 3. 18% Pig meal.

6. Keep a mineral mixture of charcoal, slaked lime, and salt (equal parts by weight) before the sow at all times.

7. The best way to feed young pigs is to feed the sow well. Gradually increase the sow's feed after farrowing so that by the end of ten days she is eating 3-4 per cent of her live weight of any of the above rations.

8. Plenty of fresh, clean water is just as important as feed. Be sure to water the sow three times daily if water is not available in the pasture.

9. Do not breed your sow until after the litter is weaned at eight weeks of age.

10. Be sure to plant oats and either vetch or peas for winter and early spring grazing for these pigs. Green feed will reduce the feed cost as much as 15-20 per cent.

Trusting that these suggestions will be helpful and that you will call on me if you desire additional information on hogs, I remain

Very truly yours,
C. E. STAPP, County Agent.

6 CORD PLIES UNDER THE TREAD

CAR OWNERS DEMAND VALUES —not Claims!

GUM-DIPPED CORDS

Every cord in Firestone Tires is Gum-Dipped. This patented extra process penetrates every cord—coats every fiber with pure liquid rubber. Gum-Dipping increases the flexing life of the cords—minimizes internal friction and heat—increases the strength of the tire body—and gives longer tire life. Only Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires give this Extra Value.

TWO EXTRA CORD PLIES UNDER THE TREAD

This patented construction of Two Extra Cord Plies under the Tread in Firestone Tires insures a stronger bond between Tread and Cord Body and greater protection against Punctures and Blowouts. This new improved "all cord" construction antiquates the old-fashioned cross-woven fabric construction used by others.

Motorists are finding the Greatest Values in Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires. Ever since Firestone and Firestone Dealers began advertising the true facts about tire quality and construction and actually demonstrating the Extra Values in Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires, distributors of special-brand mail-order tires have grown bolder and bolder with misleading claims and comparisons in the desperate effort to interest car-owners.

Car owners bought more Firestone Tires in May, June and July, than in any like period in history. This clearly shows that car owners are interested in Firestone Extra Values and are not interested in comparisons based on an almost obsolete tire size—confusing laboratory analyses—meaningless definitions—impractical challenges with unfair claims of twenty-five per-cent savings—and deceiving price comparisons.

Why risk a tire of unknown manufacture when you can get the Extra Quality, Extra Strength, and Extra Safety of the special patented construction features of Firestone Tires—Gum-Dipping, and Two Extra Cord Plies under the Tread?

You get these Extra Values—plus our Service and the DOUBLE GUARANTEE of Firestone and ourselves—at no more cost!

Drive in today.—We have sections cut from Firestone Tires, special-brand mail-order tires and others.—See the evidence.—Take nothing for granted.—Judge for Yourself.

BOWELS

need watching

Let Dr. Caldwell help whenever your child is feverish or upset; or has caught cold.

His simple prescription will make that bilious, headachy, cross boy or girl comfortable, happy, well in just a few hours. It soon restores the bowels to healthy regularity. It helps "break-up" a cold by keeping the bowels free from all that sickening mucus waste.

You have a famous doctor's word for this [illegible]. Dr. Caldwell's record of having attended over 3500 births without the loss of one mother or baby is believed unique in American medical history.

Get a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin from your drugstore and have it ready. Then you won't have to worry when any member of your family is headachy, bilious, gassy or constipated. Syrup Pepsin is good for all ages. It sweetens the bowels; increases appetite—makes digestion more complete.

NORTHINGTONS TO ATLANTA PEN FOR FOUR YEARS

Sentenced In U.S. Court After Pleading Guilty To Violating Banking Law

Allen Northington, former president of the First National Bank of Prattville and manager of the Alabama Farm Bureau Cotton Association, and his brother, Edward Northington, former vice-president and cashier of the bank, Saturday were taken to Atlanta where they are to serve sentences of four years for violation of the National Banking Act in connection with the bank's failure.

The brothers were sentenced Saturday by Judge Charles B. Kennamer, of the United States District Court, after they had entered pleas of guilty to charges of misapplication of the bank's funds and the making of false entries to cover the misapplications.

The sentence was pronounced after Judge Kennamer had heard a brief summary of the major items misapplied given by Alfred E. Sweeney, agent of the Department of Justice, who stated that while some of the funds were used to pay personal checks of Edward Northington "that there is nothing to indicate that they, (the defendants) are in possession of the money now."

The defendants and their attorneys, Wiley C. Hill, Former Gov. Bibb Graves, and Lawrence Lee, did not make any statement to the court.

"It is not for me to say how much criminal intent there was on the part of the defendants," Judge Kennamer said, "but it appears that they have very flagrantly violated the law and it is the sentence of the court that each shall serve a term of four years in the penitentiary."

The defendants were jointly indicted on 25 counts instead of 85 which was erroneously reported. Twelve of the counts alleged misapplication of funds and 13 alleged making of false entries. Each count constitutes a separate offense under the law and the maximum sentence that could have been given was five years on each count or a total of 125 years, it was said.

The sentence of the court, however,

BORROWERS ON GOVERNMENT SEED LOAN ARE TO MEET

Those farmers of Chilton County who borrowed money from the Government on seed and feed loans, have been requested to meet the assistant agent, Mr. Draper at the office of the County Agent in Clanton on next Friday afternoon during the hours of one to four o'clock.

STILL THEY DO IT

Almost every week the News receives communications from various places and persons in the county, giving interesting news items in their letters, but come unsigned. We know they are intended for publication, but the News cannot use such news items unless the writer's name is signed or we know where it came from. This week a write-up on a wedding came in, with no name signed and is not being used. The name of the writer is not published unless requested.

“His Majesty--- The Devil”

The above subject will be discussed at the Methodist church next Sunday at 11 A. M. Dr. Haskew announced last Sunday that he had heard many sermons on different subjects, but he never heard a minister venture to preach a sermon on the devil. He said that he was going to make that venture, and invited the people of Clanton to hear him.

We are sure that there are quite a few people in Clanton and Chilton county who should be anxious to hear about their master. If you want to hear the truth about the Old Boy, be at the Methodist church next Sunday. The devil has a past, a present and a future, but all the time and everywhere he is just the devil.

MAN SHOT IN RAID ON STILL IN COOSA CO.

200 Gallon Outfit Captured With Two Men; Four Arrests Here

During a raid on a still in Coosa County last Monday night, Frank Calloway was shot, another man arrested, one escaping, and a two-hundred gallon still captured along with approximately 1200 gallons of beer and several gallons of whiskey, according to reports from Federal officers and from the office of the sheriff here.

The information given a representative of the News stated that two officers from Chilton County, Sheriff W. H. Gillespie and Deputy Louis Gillespie were aiding a Federal Officer, Charlie Fridge, of Montgomery in making the raid, which took place just across the river on the Coosa County side, at Hatchett Creek. SINGING AT VERBENA IS BIG SUCCESS

Regular Fall Session Held At High School Last Sunday, All Day

Verbena has always been a great place for the singers of the county to gather, for there are a few ardent supporters there who, regardless of the lukewarmness of others, always make the singers feel welcome and make the singing a real go and an inspiration to all who attend. The Chilton County Singing Convention which met in regular fall session there last Sunday, was the best county convention that has been held in recent years. Besides lots of singers from all adjoining counties as well as Jefferson County, Prof. J. M. Henson and Mr. F. W. Tarrant of Atlanta, Ga., were there. These gentlemen are connected with the Morris-Henson Music Company of Atlanta. Also the local quartet furnished the spice to go along with the fine class singing all during the day.

MAN COMMITS SUICIDE IN MAPLESVILLE

Moody Rucker Age 30 Hangs Self From Limb of Tree Near His Home

Bringing death almost instantly from a broken neck, Moody Rucker, age 30, hanged himself last Saturday morning about daylight near his home in Adams, which is near Maplesville in the western part of the county.

Rucker, who is unmarried and lives with his mother at Adams, is said to have recently made some remarks that he would probably end his life by hanging, having given quite a bit of thought to the suicide of another man near there, who hanged himself sometime ago.

According to information given a representative of the News, Rucker left his home early Saturday morning, going to a small branch near his home, tied a rope to the limb of a tree just above a small elevation and swung off, breaking his neck almost instantly, and was found in a sitting position. Funeral services were held last Sunday at the home in Adams. STATE GARNERS BEST OAT CROP IN EIGHT YEARS

Alabama's Harvest This Year Is 4,202,000 Bushels From 191,000 Acres

By L. O. Brackeen

By harvesting 4,202,000 bushels of oats from 191,000 acres of land, Alabama farmers this year harvested the largest acreage planted to oats since 1923 when 5,541,000 bushels were harvested from 277,000 acres. The acre production of 22 bushels this year was also the highest since 1926 when the 107,000 acres planted to oats produced an average of 22 bushels an acre

Statistics compiled by the State Department of Agriculture show that the acreage and production in oats each year for the past eight years are as follows: 1931, 191,000 acres, 4,202,000 bushels; 1930, 109,000 acres, 1,908,000 bushels; 1929, 119,000 acres, 2,320,000 bushels; 1928, 70,000 acres, 1,225,000 bushels; 1927, 101,000 acres, 1,768,000 bushels; 1926, 107,000 acres, 2,354,000 bushels; 1925, 131,000 acres, 2,227,000 bushels, and 1924, 125,000 acres, 1,375,000 bushels.

That Alabama farmers can well afford to increase their oat crop this Fall is indicated by statistics showing that Alabama needs about 30,000,000 bushels each year, depending very much upon the size of the corn crop produced in the State. Oats serve as a supplement to corn for feeding livestock, therefore the larger the corn crop the less amount of oats will be needed, however, it is pointed out by agricultural leaders farmers may well afford to grow three or four times as many oats as they are at present growing.

P. O. Davis, editor, Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, this week points out that "big yields of feed crops in Alabama this year do not guarantee either an abundance of feed or big yields next year." Farmers are being reminded of this by county agents who are urging farmers to plant oats and other Winter cover crops to make more feed next year.

"Oats should be planted between September 15 and October 15 to make feed next year," said J. C. Lowery, extension agronomist of Auburn. "In

On August 1 storage holdings of case eggs were 15 per cent less than holdings on the same date in 1930.

It is officially reported that one New York manufacturer is using one million bushels of white soft wheat annually.

Several gin days have been planned in Calhoun County this fall for saving pure D.P.L. 4-8 seed to eliminate the short staple problem according to County Agent S. R. Doughty. More than 12,000 bushels will be saved.

Lyle Brown, extension forester of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, is cautioning everyone to be careful about forest fires this fall. Such fires cause needless, useless, and wasteful destruction and losses of property, he said.

Randolph County placed 3,500 bushels of D.P.L.4-8 last spring. Gin days have already been arranged for saving pure seed of this variety, says L. M. Hollingsworth, county agent. This is another step in the cotton improvement program being sponsored to eliminate inferior staples.

ACTIVE AT 88 YEARS

Local newspapers and a wide circle of friends and neighbors recently congratulated Samuel B. Smith of Titusville, Pa., on his 88th birthday, and many asked the inevitable question as to the secret of his long and active life.

The answer would indicate that his life has been long because it has been active. At any rate he still works 10 or 11 hours a day in the acre garden adjoining his home. He eats only green vegetables from his own garden; does not eat sweets or desserts of any kind, and never used tea, coffee or other stimulants, except for a short time when he was in the army during the Civil War.

Mr. Smith takes considerable pride in the fact that he was one of those who 72 years ago this month drilled the famous Drake well, the first oil well drilled in any part of the world. The monument to this achievement, of which he is the sole survivor, stands less than two miles away from his present home.

Around it 11 wells are actively contributing their quota of Pennsylvania grade crude oil, the product of the original well and still universally rated as the worlds' premier crude. In four states, Pennsylvania, New York, West Virginia and Ohio, this same crude is being steadily produced in large quantities from thousands of wells.

This pioneer achievement of Sam Smith and his father pointed the way for the establishment of one of the world's greatest and most vital industries. He richly deserves the many messages of congratulation which came to him on his 88th birthday.

Ticks are long-lived creatures, and some individuals may live for as long as two or three years without food.

A lime-sulphur or nicotine-sulphur dip will cure mange, or common scab, on cattle and sheep. At least two dippings are necessary, from 10 to 14 days apart.

The exhaust gas from an automobile will "gas" rats in their burrows. Attach a hose to the exhaust pipe and hold it in the burrow, letting the engine run at moderate speed for about ten minutes.

It's a good plan to dispose of hens at the end of their first laying year. This improves the average production of the flock. It also helps to keep the flock free from tuberculosis, which usually affects fowls more than 1½ years old.

Sometimes a few feet of fall in even a small stream of water can be made to operate a hydraulic ram and thus furnish an inexpensive supply of water for home, garden, and stock purposes. Information on rams appears in Farmers' Bulletin 1448-F, Farmstead Water Supply, mailed free by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C.

The open-furrow method of sowing winter oats may reduce injury from winter killing, except in very cold seasons. Several years ago the Georgia Agricultural Experiment Station devised an open-furrow drill especially for fall seeding of oats, and farm-implement manufacturers have improved types of this drill and put it on the market. The drill sows the seed in rows from 16 to 24 inches apart. An ordinary single-row planter may also be used for this purpose. Furrow drills may be obtained with a fertilizer attachment, which distributes the fertilizer in the furrows with the seed.

Southern forests cover approximately one-fourth of the total forest area of the United States. When the uniformity of type and fast rate of growth of trees in the southern "piney woods" also is considered, they are unrivalled in their total productive capacity by any other forest type in the country. U.S. Forest Service investigators estimate the second-growth pine woods of the South, under adequate protection and systematic forestry management, can be made to produce at least one-fourth of the total timber requirements of the country and practically all the naval stores needed for domestic consumption.

ART—

Unlike the artisan, the artist can keep on working long after his physical powers have waned. My neighbor, Daniel Chester French, the famous sculptor, is past 81, but this year he is exhibiting one of the finest pieces of stautary he has ever conceived. It represents a young mother holding her infant son aloft and if ever cold bronze held the spirit of life and youth it is in this piece.

Mr. French may live to a hundred, and I hope he does, but when the end comes he will be found still beautiful piece which stands in the Metropolitan Museum, called working, like the artist in his own "Death and the Sculptor," in which the angel of death is staying the hand of the young artist.

ALCOHOL—

Pure alcohol is a natural element in the human brain, according to a scientist who presented proof his statement before a meeting of medical men in Buffalo the other day.

That is certain to be taken up by the enemies of prohibition as an argument in favor of the repeal of the Volstead act. Of course, it will be an absurd argument, but it will have weight with many.

There is no question in my mind, on the other hand, that a great deal of the argument against drinking, on which the prohibition movement gained its strength, was based on equally absurd allegations.

The fact is that there are no facts about the use of alcoholic beverages which apply equally to all people, or to any individual person all the time.

Some day the general public will be well enough informed to discount the "bunk" of both sides in the prohibition argument.

ROADS—

Who is watching the road contractors in your town and county? There are many fine-looking concrete roads being built which will not stand up under heavy traffic, especially in regions where frost can upset their foundations.

The city of White Plains, New York, sent an engineer out to make borings in the pavement of a road which cost around $100.000 a mile, and discovered that the contractor had put in a foundation only half as deep as the contract called for.

Concrete roads, when properly built, have proved by far the most satisfactory so far. But when improperly built they can give more trouble and cost more for repairs than any other type of highway.

FOOD—

The experimental work of the company which is starting up the business of freezing fresh foods by means of "dry ice" so that they will keep indefinitely and can be merchandised like stockings or hardware, has progressed so far and so well that the largest New York department store is now selling "frosted" oysters, fish, meats of many kinds, fruits and vegetables just as they sell shoes or shirts or any other "dry" goods.

Several small cities have responded well to the experimental sales efforts, and with the big stores in the large cities taking up this new line of goods, it seems as if the day was not far off when the local butcher and green grocer might be wise to look for something else to do, or else to get into line with the new method.

We shall have to make new definitions of "perishable" foodstuffs.

FORD—

Improvements in the Model A are to be followed if rumor is correct, with a new type of Ford car in the Spring. I know no more about it than anyone else does, but my guess is that the new Ford, when it comes out, will be as surprising as was the present Model A.

Henry Ford has always been a pioneer. He was the first automobile manufacturer to put the steering wheel on the left, where it belongs, and all the others had to follow suit. He was the first to detect the flaw in the Selden patent, on which all the other makers paid royalties for years. Ford refused to pay tribute, fought the case to the highest courts, and won a victory for the whole industry. He was the first to reduce the daily hours of labor in his factory from nine to eight, the first to establish a minimum wage of $5 a day for the lowliest worker, the first to use modern alloys for strength and lightness, and to build engines to such accuracy that no "block test" was required.

Ford can do these things because he has no board of directors to tell him what he can't do, no stockholders clamoring for dividends at the expense of the product. The greatest achievements have always been, always will be, by men working single-handed.

"Why
My Next Car will be A FORD"

When you buy a Ford there are two things you never have to worry about. One is reliability. The other is long life.

Here's an interesting letter from a Ford owner in North Carolina:

"My Ford was purchased May 8, 1928, and has been run 121,767 miles. It has never stopped on the road for repairs of any kind whatsoever except punctures.

"The brakes were relined at 101,000 miles. My gas mileage averaged 21 miles to the gallon, and on tires, 19,000 miles per tire. I travel over all kinds of road conditions—mountainous and flat.

"I consider this a wonderful record and I assure you my next car will also be a Ford."

This is just one of many tributes to the reliability and long life of the Ford. A Ford owner in Iowa tells of driving his Ford 73,000 miles in a single year. Another writes of 120,000 miles of good service.

Think ahead when you are considering the purchase of an automobile and consider what it will be like after thousands of miles of driving. Will you still be satisfied? Will you still say "it's a great car"?

If it's a Ford, you know everything will be O. K. It will be taking you there and back in good style, just as it has always done. And you will have saved many important, worth-while dollars in cost of operation and up-keep and low yearly depreciation.

NEEDS OF RURAL SCHOOLS

In a recent report of his studies of rural schools and the children attending them, Prof. Thomas D. Wood of Columbia University paints a gloomy picture of the conditions surrounding the country child.

He declares that the average rural school house is the worst type of building that could be imagined and "less fit for its use than prisons, asylums, almshouses, stables, chicken houses and dog kennels are for their uses."

In other words, he makes the charges that better provision is made for criminals, paupers and animals than is made for the school children of the rural districts.

While this is a very strong statement, and may not hold true in the better communities, the fact remains the rural schools are not what they ought to be and in many cases are a disgrace to a civilized nation.

Progress is being made in nearly all the backward states, but it is pitifully slow, as greater numbers of children must be provided for each year and school revenues must be continually increased to keep pace with this normal growth.

If conditions are one-half as bad as Prof. Wood declares them to be, parents should take a more serious interest in the situation and put forth still greater efforts to provide proper school facilities for their children.

Letters To The Editor

Editor Chilton County News:

It is a fact that cotton for two years or more in this section has been raised at a loss—a majority of the farmers use all the commercial fertilizer they can buy, fight the weevil and other pests, pray for favorable weather conditions and when a big crop is gathered and sold find that instead of a profit the debts have grown larger.

Now then, to continue this sort of thing means extreme poverty for our people.

If the farmers could agree on a reduction of 25%, or 50% or even more for the 1932 cotton crop and faithfully abide the agreement it would be better than legislation.

But if the farmers want legislation to cut out entirely the 1932 cotton crop let them have it.

We can produce anything that can a majority of the states, and can produce enough to feed our people and clothe them as well.

It would be an ungrateful landlord who is financially able to refuse to help tenants who have been faithful to him.

Merchants, bankers and professional men who are able financially should, and I believe, will do all in their power to assist those who have been loyal patrons.

All of our people who are fortunately situated should do all in their power to help the farmer through the year, 1932.

So let the farmers take his choice on the cotton question and back him up to the extent of our resources.

Yours very truly,
H. B. OLIVER.

Verbena, Ala., Sept. 17, 1931.

Dear Editor Chilton County News:

Please permit me to say a few words to the cotton growers of Chilton County in regard to the resolution they adopted on Saturday, September the 12th, 1931, which provides for a special session of the legislature for the purpose of passing a law prohibiting the planting of cotton in the year, 1932.

Now, Mr. Cotton Farmer, let us cut right square to the line, regardless of where the chips may fly. Such a proposition as passing a law to prohibit the cotton farmers from planting cotton should be an insult to every cotton farmer in the cotton growing states. Why? Because we should have sense enough to quit the cotton business without being so foolish as to ask a special session of the legislature to pass a law prohibiting us from planting it.

Just think of this great Southland, where we cotton farmers have paid out millions of dollars of tax money for educational purposes and we get an over production of cotton. We are so narrow as to ask our law making body to come together in special session and pass a law to stop us, when we know that it costs us more to produce it than we can get out of it, but just can't quit. But are willing to pay for a special session of the Legislature to pass a law to make us quit. Lord, pity and have mercy on us old cotton farmers, for we know not what manner of men we are.

Mr. Farmers, let us go back to the year 1928, and come on down the line to the present moment and consider just a few things that have happened to the farmer. Did both Hoover and Smith have a farm relief plank in their platforms which stated that the farmer must have relief. After Mr. Hoover was elected and organized the federal farm board and they began buying wheat and cotton, wasn't the farmers getting about $1.40 per bushel for wheat and 17 to 18 cents per pound for cotton. And the more wheat and cotton the board bought the more it declined in price. What is Mr. Hoover's board doing today to relieve the depressed farmers? Mr. Farmers, what can you expect of a Governor and Legislature that have betrayed your trust.

Has there been anything done for the farmer since 1928 that was constructive to him? No. But to the contrary everything has been destructive. Mr. Farmers, we are right square up against the wall. We need not look to any official for relief. Neither to any lawmaking body.

The farmers will have to seek relief through themselves, by having just as little business as possible with the merchants, lawyers, doctors and not too much with the preachers. But look to God and trust in Him alone and relief will surely come.

In conclusion, I want to tell you just a little about how I have run my business this year. I bought no fertilizer, planted no cotton, have made plenty of corn, peas, peanuts, potatoes, and filled all my outhouses with hay, and had to build a crib for my corn. I have the fattest cows and mules that I have ever had in my life. I haven't looked for relief from any farm board, county agent, nor any lawmaking body, but asked God to direct my business for me both farm and store, and I am perfectly satisfied with the results I have received.

Dear old farmer, don't look to man for relief any longer, you ought to know by this time you can never get it that way.

Yours respectfully,
A. A. JACKSON.

New York Steamboats

More excursion boats operate out of New York City than any other port in the whole world. There must be at least fifty lines running daily to nearby resorts not to mention the palatial steamers which ply between here and New England points.

The favorite trip is the one up the Hudson River, either to Albany, 142 miles, or forty miles to West Point. The latter trip, which ends in the famed Highlands where Rip Van Winkle held forth 200 years ago, and which enables one to see the cadets on parade, is a never failing pleasure.

Inexpensive Pleasures

Nowhere can one get as much for one's money as one can on the steamboats. For between $1 and $2 one can sail in comfort all day past the most beautifuy scenery enriched by historical associations, in perfect comfort and safety. One of the few objections is that the passageways on all boats are crowded and it takes a long time to get off at the pier.

This has been arranged purposely. Narrow entrances have been found to break up incipient panics better than anything else. In a theater the reverse is the case, but on a boat the plan is to break the crowd up into small units which can be handled by the crew.

A Terrible Memory—

Those whose memories run back thirty years will recall the most disastrous happening that ever took place on an excursion boat—the time when the Gen. Slocum went down in the East River with a loss of more than a thousand lives, nearly all women and children.

The terrible accident eclipses in pathos anything of its kind in history, because it was easily preventible. Even when the Eastland turned turtle in Chicago a few years ago, the loss was much smaller and was not confined entirely to women and little children. The Gen. Slocum caught fire and before her captain could beach her the frenzied passengers died in the panic. For years the excursion business was at a low ebb but since then has picked up. Actually, one is as safe on such a steamboat as anywhere in the world.

Long Island Sound—

Sailing up Long Island Sound the other day one passed through simply hundreds of small boats of all kinds, from millionaires' craft, including famous racing yachts with masts ninety feet high, to little rowboats with a "kicker," otherwise a small gasoline motor.

Everybody on the water appeared to be enjoying themselves hugely. The waves were too small to endanger the little craft and whenever one headed for shore, a beautiful sight greeted one. One could see Theodore Roosevelt's country mansion at Oyster Bay at one time, while on the opposite mainland were the small villages where millionaires, artists and others who commute into the big city have formed happy colonies.

Other Cheap Trips—

Aside from the day-long excursions, there are numerous other trips to be had for little money. The sail to Staten Island by ferry boat costs five cents only and takes twenty minutes. Many visitors spend whole mornings riding back and forth on this line.

Then there is the trip to the Statue of Liberty which costs only 25 cents; the trip to Ellis Island, where all emigrants from Europe land and which costs nothing, while other ferries will carry you on rides of ten or fifteen minutes for sums ranging from three to five cents only.

New York's marine playground is one of its best points and should not be missed by any visitor. While the big excursion lines stop running on Labor Day, many of the trips continue all winter and if one is clad warmly, the trip is even more enjoyable then than in summer, as the crowds are not there to bother.

Two Men Held For Gin Burning

Aaron Cochran, farmer, and Arnce Crumbley, cotton gine operator, were jailed at Cullman Friday afternoon on charges of second degree arson, for the burning last Sunday night of a gin owned by J. B. Elrod, which Cochran, it is alleged, confessed to firing, claiming he did so at the instance of Crumbley.

Elrod and Crumbley operated the only cotton gins in the community in which both resided, which is some 15 miles from the City of Cullman. Motive for the burning is alleged to have been the removal by Crumbley from the cotton-ginning business of his only competitor.

Under the direction of State Fire Marshal R. C. Searcy, an investigation conducted by Deputy Marshall J. C. Crews, was begun last Tuesday, of the Sunday night's fire. As the result of this inquiry, Cochran was arrested.

Following his arrest, it was stated, he made a full confession to burning Elrod's gin, and in this confession implicated Crumbley, declaring Crumbley hired him to do it on a promise of $10 in cash, and free ginning of Cochran's cotton for two years: Crumbley furnishing two gallons of kerosene to start the fire with.

At the conclusion of the confession, Crumbley was also arrested and committed to jail

VALUE OF GOOD WILL

One of the striking developments of recent years in the business world is the increased value which individuals and corporations place upon the good will of the public they serve

Good will is really only another name for confidence, for if a business concern has the confidence of the community it has its good will. It often takes years of fair dealing to build up the great asset of public good will, yet it may be lost by a few careless transactions.

For this reason, everlasting vigilance is required on the part of owners of a business, to see that not only are their own principles and policies sound, but that the spirit of the establishment is carried out by every person connected with it, even to the lowest salaried employee.

Hoover's Time Shortens

Chairman Fess, of the Republican National Committee, after luncheoning at the White House, told the Washington correspondents that the President was making a thorough study of the unemployment situation and would have a comprehensive program to take care of the matter within a month. The unemployment situation has existed for about two years and steadily has become more acute. During this period we have been advised from time to time that the President was bending all his great powers to remedy the situation.

The question naturally arises, why the comprehensive program so confidently announced by Chairman Fess was not reached months ago. It appears rather obvious that President Hoover either has been completely as sea as to the problem or that he has been indulging in his unfortunate habit of guessing and that he again guessed wrong.

That he should have delayed until this time in making preparations to take care of the distress next winter suggests that through all the era of unemployment he has assumed that the situation would right itself—by what miracle is not indicated—and therefore let the whole business slide. This is a form of optimism that has characterized the administration ever since the Hoover panic came upon us, and which has, incidentally, contributed to its acuteness and duration. Foreboding of the extreme distress that must ensue unless adequate measures are provided to meet the emergency of the coming winter have been voiced by practically every authority on industry, labor and political economy throughout the land. Naturally there is no exhibition of relief at the tidings that the President, two years after the advent of the trouble, is to begin a thorough investigation and no great confidence that he has any more definite program in view than he had when it was announced that he had a complete formula for the correction of the farmer's ills and the farmer's plight, back in the halcyon days when he was assuring the nation that a millenium of prosperity would be the inevitable sequence of his election.

There was a program developed and enacted by Congress which he threw away. The Wagner employment bills were designed to avert just such situations as are threatening to come with the bad weather. The President vetoed the most important of these although as Secretary of Commerce he had endorsed an identical program. Ostensibly, the President feared that the cooperation of the federal and state agencies to find jobs for men out of work would complicate the matter with local politics. Actually, what he avoided was that the selection of administrative agents would be made by Democratic governors in Democratic states. He offered no substitute measure when he vetoed the Wagner bill, with the result that the uncertain, indefinite expedient resorted to by Secretary of Labor Doak provided jobs for scores of Republican political hacks.

Recently Secretary Doak announced triumphantly that his agency had found places for 281,000 of the unemployed. The Department of Labor refused information as to the whereabouts and character of these jobs, but it was finally unearthed that Mr. Doak was claiming credit for the harvest hands who for a month or two are gathering the ntion's crops. This purely seasonal employment occurs every year, in panic as in boom times, and must follow as inevitably as the ripening of the grain.

Another indication of the administration's tendency to let things drift and trust in luck was afforded by Senator Hebert of Rhode Island, who on his return from Europe pontifically announced that the establishment of a Government unemployment insurance system would eventually lead to the adoption of the dole principle in the United States. This utterance also followed his being a guest of President Hoover. It may be recalled that at the recent session of Congress the Senate appointed a committee to study all systems of unemployment insurance, governmental and private, with a view to recommending legislation on the subject. As originally constituted, this committee consisted of Senator Wagner of New York, chairman Senator Hebert of Rhode Island, and Senator Glenn of Illinois. At the first and only session held by this committee the two Republicans deposed Wagner and made Hebert chairman, on the frank ground that the Republican administration insisted on the change. The substitution of Hebert, who was a regularly registered insurance lobbyist before the Rhode Island legislature, for the New York Senator, a recognized authority on matters appertaining to unemployment, was the only thing transacted at this session. Now we have the chairman of the committee created to make an investigation of the whole subject giving an advance verdict. This course—regardless of the merits of the verdict announced by the Rhode Island Senator after his conference with President Hoover—is thoroughly insulting to the legislative branch of the Government which delegated the committee to study the question.

Inevitably the results of these happenings must be a still greater distrust of the administration's ability to meet the situation and will carry to many minds the implication that politics will continue to be the guiding principle in the disposition of the problem.

Gay Nineties Make a "Comeback"

With a French Empress of bygone days influencing the name of a currently popular hat, the constant revival of historic events and persons to positions atop our heads and all around us is worthy a look. Empire green is a very far distant revival. Almost any day now we may have Queen Elizabeth ruffs. The gay nineties have "comeback" with a rush and rustle. In the world of furniture, it is not possible to converse without mentioning an empire or a period of the past. Perhaps the most consistent revival has been in the rejuvenation of fine cottons as diaphaneous and dainty materials offering appeal to the queens of any day whether crowned or uncrowned.

The Empress Josephine conquered Napoleon in a cotton frock. And so in 1931 the conquering belles of every gay country club event throughout the United States have been more than apt to be gowned in sheer and softly sparkling cottons.

After all, it's not bad fun to have revivals; only the question does arise why we ever let go of things combining the merits of both beauty and usefulness.

Electric Power In Alabama

Last winter a joint committee of the Alabama Legislature was appointed to investigate "various phases of rates, tax values, services, etc.," of the electrical utilities in that state.

The report has just been published. It is concurred in by seven of the eight committeemen, with the eighth dissenting. The findings should be of national interest, in view of the present-day political attack on the power industry.

It was found that the Alabama Power Company—the principal utility in this state—was earning 6 per cent on its value for rate-making purposes—one per cent less than the legal fair return. It was also found that this company was assessed 46.81 per cent of the market value of its properties as compared with an average of 45 per cent for all other utilities in the state. The Tax Commissioner testified that the average assessment on taxable property in Alabama was 33 per cent of its fair market value.

In the matter of rates, the findings are especially important. A comparison of the private company's rates with those of thirteen municipal utilities showed that the former were well below the latter in every instance.

Finally, it was stated that during the days the committee held sessions, not a single individual appeared before it to complain about any of the utility companies.

All in all, the report shows that private power companies in Alabama—as in practically every state—are rendering good service at low rates, in the public interest. This again illustrates that when the facts are disclosed, the political opponents of the electric industry have little ground on which to stand.

"ROUND TOWN"

---by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

> "The man who foolishly does me wrong, I will return to him the protection of my most ungrudging love; and the more evil comes from him, the more good shall go from me."
> —Buddha.

"Farewell To Thee," is the song I will be singing to you folks this week. Why? Because I am writing my last "Round Town" column for this newspaper right now, that having been the verdict of the ed last week.

Just what to say when I know this is my last chance to say it with my "Round Town" manners carried in this newspaper for over a year, every week, never missing, rain or shine. It seems like I am being given my last chance to say something here. To say or not to say, that is the question. I'd like to go on and tell the ed just what I think of him, and write to you folks straight from the heart. But that would not be any different from other weeks, as I quite often wrote straight from the heart.

As to where I'm going is nobody's business—yet. Maybe I have heard the call of the wild, or maybe I'm following Greeley's advice and have gone West, by the time you read this. Nevertheless, this is all, I'm signing off, to be cast into that chasm of forgotten things, but memories of the pleasant hours writing this column will linger on. Memories of the predicaments I have gotten the ed into, and the blame he has carried for me, will not be forgotten. I regret I will not be able to select my "Who's Who" this time, but if the ed has a successor in view for this column, maybe he can be persuaded to select a "Who's Who" for you.

Perhaps you will wonder why this "Round Town" column will be no more. I can't just explain that myself right now, but I'll probably pay the News office a visit now and then, and will give you readers a word or too, when I drop around.

Have just been talking to the ed, who says he kind of regrets my leaving. I knew he would. He says, however, that he has made arrangements to fill this column with views, opinions, etc., by an author who is well in touch with things. That's fine, because I'm sure the ed made a good selection for my successor. Maybe it is an O. O. McIntyre, the second.

Maybe the next column here will not be adverse to dancing, and will look at it in a broader manner than I did.

Maybe he will be a married man, if it is a he. And he won't be talking so much about the ladies and putting his foot in his mouth, like I've done at times.

Maybe he will write about roses, moonlight, fishes, cats, dogs, flowers, tin cans, etc.

Maybe he won't think humans are so funny, as I do.

Maybe he will be a dignified gentleman, who speaks of aristocracy at every sweep of his pen, and will teach you folks to fear his pen, or typewriter, or something. Whatever he uses.

Maybe he is a woman-hater and won't even mention them, not even so much as to term them as necessary evils.

Or maybe he won't even write about Clanton. I really don't know.

The Chilton County News, the paper I have caused to be so widely known by writing this column, will always occupy a warm spot in my heart, and maybe the ed can be convinced to let me come back and write this column, provided my successor don't make a hit with him.

In closing, I take my pen in hand to offer apologies to a certain young lady friend of a friend of mine.

"DO YOU REMEMBER"

By Thomas Haynes Bayly

Do you remember when you heard
My lips breathe love's first faltering word?
You do, sweet—don't you?
When, having wandered all the day,
Linked arm in arm, I dared to say,
"You'll love me—won't you?"

And when you blushed and could not speak,
I fondly kissed your glowing cheek,
Did that affront you?
Oh, surely not—your eye expressed
No wrath—but said, perhaps in jest,
"You'll love me—won't you?"

I'm sure my eyes replied, "I will."
And you believe that promise still,
You do, sweet—don't you?
Yes, yes! when age has made our eyes
Unfit for questions or replies,
You'll love me—won't you?

Special Features For Women's Dist. Conv.

LaFayette, Ala., Sept. 21.—Under the direction of the LaFayette Study Club two especially interesting numbers are being prepared for the Fifth District Convention of the A. F. W. C. to be in LaFayette October 8 and 9.

At 6:45 Thursday evening, October 8, there will be presented at the Baptist church a cantata, Eliland by Fielitz. The story of the cantata is about a monk who falls in love with a nun, Irmingard. Upon appearing before the priest he is reproved for his love and commanded to renounce it and Irmingard. This he does and resigns himself to his fate. These ten short numbers compose the cantata: Silent Grief: Frauenworth, Roses, Secret Greetings, On the Shore of the Lake, Child Voices, Moonlight Night, Dreams, Anathema, Resignation.

Miss Miriam Siler of LaFayette, music chairman of Fifth District, is in charge of the cantata and is being assisted by Mrs. Frank Barrow. Those taking part are Mrs. Frank Barrow, Mrs. J. F. Jones, Mrs. G. R. Bowling, and Miss Sara Frazer as first sopranos; Mrs. C. W. Lowe and Mrs. Myrtis Jenkins as second sopranos; Mrs. Rea Schuessler and Miss Kathleen Cumbee as altos; and Miss Miriam Siler, accompanist.

Just preceding the reception Thursday evening O Joy San, a one act Japanese play, will be given. The characters are O Joy San; Otaka, maid to O Joy; Yushi, a servant; Steven Shaw, a wealthy young American, husband of O Joy; Mrs. Shaw, mother of Steven; and Helen Reese, a former sweetheart of Steven.

The play is characterized by its light humor and pathos. Steven Shaw who is in Japan as manager of a branch bank of a large one in the United States of which his father is president, falls in love with and marries O Joy. They are most happy until Steven's mother and the girl to whom he was engaged before he left the States, Helen Reese, come over with the intention of breaking up the marriage. O Joy refuses the demand of Mrs. Shaw that she release Steven but finally upon being persuaded by the mother and Miss Reese that Steven wishes to leave gives her permission. In the end everything is all right for O Joy and Steven.

The players are Mrs. R. S. Willingham as O Joy; Mrs. Harold Huguley, Otaka; Gene Fuller, Yushi; William Huie, Steven; Ada Causey, Mrs. Shaw; and Miriam Siler as Helen Reese.

All convention visitors will be honor guests at these two entertainments. And an invitation is extended the public to attend either or both of them.

The Fall Dress

Straighter, Less Fullness Is Mode

By Inez Holland

Fall dress silhouettes vary with the clock. The morning or street dresses have straighter lines and whenever pleats and godets are used they start low and finish soon, due partly to the shortness of the skirt. Dresses are often as much as fourteen inches from the ground.

The new afternoon dress silhouette features a moulded hip line and a high placed flare. Through circular shaping, fulness accumulates on the way to the hem, and the longer dresses for formal afternoon wear show very full flares. The length of these skirts are from six to ten inches from the ground.

Evening dresses have higher flares, accentuated by vertical trimmings and seamings. They may be shorter in front than in back, coming as high as the ankle. However, the instep is average and an even all around skirt is, just at present, the best mode.

Black an Early Favorite

The black daytime dress persists, despite the fresh appealing browns, vivid greens, bold reds and all the warm Colonial colors inspired by the French Exposition. Quite often, however, the black dress is touched with a brilliant barbaric color or combination of contrasting colors.

Diagonal lines in fabric weaves are carried out in the seaming and trimmings of dresses as well as coats. Great variety is achieved with pin tucking, box pleats and bias folds.

The two-piece dress is in favor, the blouse, coat or upper part of the ensemble often contrasting in color and pattern with that of the skirt. The blouse is usually a patterned fabric while the skirt is preferable in a monotone. The jacket or coat influence is seen everywhere and many two-piece models are belted, with the blouse continuing to hip-length in simulation of a jacket suit.

Coat dresses are being shown and are most attractive.

Necklines Receive Attention

Necklines frequently attract much attention. There are scarf treatments of various kinds—the scarfs usually being long. A combination of brilliant, Colonial colored fabrics used at the neckline of some of the dress models is repeated in some cases at the beltline. One model from Bruyer shows a generous lapel of bright colored material on one side with the bright color theme being carried out in the neckline at the other side. This was shown on a black woolen costume.

Sleeves show interesting variety. They generally have a fulness at the elbow and wrist, but some models have the raglan cut front with kimono cut back and are tight from the elbow down.

Fabrics, collar and color treatments are the most important details of the Fall dress. So far, woolens are the favorite, the only silk dresses being shown in small patterned travel silks. Lustreless silk is smart for trimming, especially on knitted frocks.

Principles Of Rate Making For Electric Service

Explained By Legislative Investigating Committee On Public Utilities In Alabama

IN its report to the Alabama Legislature, July, 1931, the Joint Committee, appointed under House Resolution No. 80 for the purpose of investigating various phases of rates, tax values, service, etc., of electric utilities in Alabama, gives a clear cut explanation of the underlying principles involved in making rates for electric service in Alabama. Believing this explanation will be of interest to our customers, we quote the following from the Committee's report:

"The principles involved in a system of rates for the various kinds of consumers of electricity, including industry, power and the various forms of domestic uses, are probably as little understood by the public as any question of equal importance.

It is not practicable for us to undertake a lengthy discussion of these principles, but we will do so briefly.

The first duty of the rate maker is to ascertain what amount of income will be necessary for the utility to procure to enable it to pay its expenses of operation maintenance, depreciation, taxes, etc., and leave enough to pay a reasonable return on the fair value of the property used and useful in the public service. When this has been ascertained the big problem of distributing this charge equitably among the various classes of users is faced. This problem presents many angles that must needs have material consideration; but we will not undertake to set them out. Suffice to say that our Public Service Commission devotes much time and investigation to these various angles, takes testimony of the utilities and the consumers and reaches its conclusions after full investigation and consideration, and after having heard the viewpoint of all interests involved.

The conclusions of the Public Service Commission are always subject to be appealed to the Courts by either the utility affected, or any citizen interested.

In this connection will say that the work of our Public Service Commission in this respect seems to be thorough and efficient and its findings fair to the public and the utility."

We shall be glad to furnish any customer of Alabama Power Company more detailed information as to its rates for electricity.

FALL OATS WILL MAKE FEED FOR NEXT YEAR

Auburn, Ala.,—Big yields of feed crops in Alabama this year do not guarantee either an abundance of feed or big yields next year. Farmers are being reminded of this by county agents when it is time to plant oats and other winter cover crops to make more feed next year.

"And oats should be planted between September 15 and October 15 to make feed next year," said J. C. Lowery, extension agronomist of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn. "In experiments at Auburn the yield of fall-sown oats was double that of spring-sown oats over a period of twenty years.

"Drill oats in cotton middles soon after the cotton has been picked. Planting early—even if the oats have to be planted in the middle of a summer-growing crop before it is harvested—is of much greater importance in securing a good yield than delaying planting to plow the land and prepare it thoroughly.

"Oats should be seeded at the rate of two to three bushels per acre. Sow red rustproof, Appler, or Fulghum varieties. The Fulghum is earlier than the rustproof.

"North of Birmingham where oats are sometimes lost from freezes the Norton oat is promising, having stood 8 degrees above zero in January, 1928, when other varieties were almost completely killed. In three years tests it made about as large yields as other varieties. The winter turf oat is popular with many farmers in the Tennesse Valley.

"It pays to treat oats for smut. Every farmer can secure a cheap and practical formula for treating oats for smut from his county agent."

CHAPTER XLVIII

Hospitalization and completion of three corps headquarters and staff organizations occupied my attention the last week of June, 1918.

Twelve of our divisions were then either in line or in reserve behind the French, five were in training in rear of the British army. Of those with the French, seven were concentrated in the vicinity of Villers-Cotterets and Chateau-Thierry, between the French front and Paris.

The British seemed to think the French unduly nervous about the safety of Paris, and that Foch was holding a greater proportion of American troops behind the French lines than necessary. They believed there was a strong probability of another attack against their front, and felt General Foch was not paying enough attention to their situation. However, they probably did not realize that a counteroffensive was contemplated on this front should the occasion present itself.

Corps Headquarters Organized.

The First corps headquarters, organized in January under Maj. Gen. Hunter Liggett, with Col. Malin Craig as chief of staff, had become a smoothly working machine ready for active service anywhere, but events had moved so swiftly there had been no opportunity for the assembly of divisions. With the increasing size of our army it was evident that a greater number of divisions would be able to take part in operations at earlier dates than we had thought possible. Consequently, the organization of the Second, Third and Fourth corps headquarters was at once completed.

The Second corps, Maj. Gen. George Read commanding, with Col. George Simonds as chief of staff, and a limited number of staff officers, was charged with matters of administration and command pertaining to the divisions behind the British front. The Third corps, temporarily under Maj. Gen. William M. Wright, Col. Alfred Bjornstad, chief of staff, continued to supervise training of divisions serving in the Vosges area. The Fourth corps was temporarily under the corps chief of staff, Col. Stuart Heintzelman, with headquarters at Toul. By the actual constitution of these corps they were expected soon to become efficient enough to handle units in operations.

French Hospitals Deficient.

As to hospitals, when our troops became suddenly engaged in the Chateau-Thierry region we had to rely largely upon the assistance of the French to care for our wounded. Although they had given us every assurance that hospital arrangements for those operations would be complete, and without question did their best, it was only through the mobile hospitals we had organized that we were able to give our casualties proper attention.

In extenuation of the French failure to take care of our casualties properly it must be said that when the Germans swept over the Chemin des Dames to Chateau-Thierry the French lost 45,000 beds, included in some of their best equipped hospitals. We had no hospitals on that front and with limited transportation found it difficult to supplement the scant French facilities. In fact, the situation as to hospital accommodations for our troops was about to reach a critical stage.

In this connection a cable was actually submitted by Mr. Casper Whitney from the New York Tribune which was scathing in its denunciation of our medical department. The censor immediately informed the medical representatives at my headquarters, and General Ireland, the chief surgeon, requested an investigation, which was at once carried out by the chief of the inspector general's corps, General Brewster. Mr. Whitney was asked to be present at all the hearings, and when the actual facts were brought out, showing the efficiency of the medical department, he was most apologetic and thereafter was an enthusiastic supporter of the wisdom of the censorship.

Fourth of July Observance.

The Fourth of July found me in Chaumont. The French people there never missed an opportunity to show their pleasure at having us in their midst and their appreciation of our aid to the cause. The principal ceremony of the day was a reception to the officers of my headquarters by the local French officials, both civic and military, and the prominent citizens at the Hotel de Ville. This was an altogether delightful social gathering, including a series of suitable speeches.

The spirit of fraternity that prevailed made it easy to respond. In fact, on this, as often on similar occasions, I found myself almost as enthusiastic as the French speaker, though perhaps less content with my effort.

The allies elsewhere did not forget that it was our Independence day, and messages came from Clemenceau, Foch and Haig and many others from all over France.

Yanks in Hamel Attack.

Regardless of the distinct understanding that our troops behind the British front were there for training and were not to be used except in an emergency, the British made continuous effort to get them into their lines.

They planned an attack by the Australians for the Fourth of July and requested Maj. Gen. George Read, commander of the Second corps then still in training, to permit some of the troops of the Thirty-third division to take part.

At first the British suggested four companies, but later they wanted the number increased to ten. As the use of Americans at this time was directly contrary to the arrangement, naturally it did not meet with my approval.

Having learned that such a combined attack was planned, I spoke to Marshal Haig about it when I saw him in Paris July 3, and he entirely agreed with my point of view. It seems that General Read, afterward, in accordance with my instructions, told General Rawlinson that I did not want partly trained troops to participate. However, our troops had by this time become fully committed to it. Although the British chief of staff had consented to leave our troops out, when he learned from Rawlinson that it would compel them to defer the operation, he informed Read that no change could be made without orders from Field Marshal Haig, who, he said, could not be reached, and so the attack was carried out, as I learned the next day.

The fact that General Read and his officers and men were keen to get into the battle went far to excuse him. It seems needless to add also that the splendid behavior of the troops in the operation was a decided argument in favor of leniency. This division also afterward displayed the same eagerness to get at the enemy in several hard-fought engagements during the trying days of the Meuse-Argonne.

CHAPTER XLIX

A number of our divisions were quite prepared to engage in any contemplated offensive and their location at the moment lent hope for the early formation of one and probably two entire corps of Americans.

Liggett's First corps had taken its place in line July 4, with the Second division (Harbord), relieved on the 10th by the Twenty-sixth (Edwards), and a French division under its direction. The corps staff had been shaken down to the routine of its work and had become in every respect an efficient group, performing its functions with the confidence and precision worthy of the more experienced staffs of the allied armies.

During an inspection trip July 12 to the headquarters of the First corps I had lunch with General Harbord at Nanteuil-sur-Marne, where his division was resting. He told of a marine in his division who had captured seventy-five German prisoners single-handed.

Germans Attack Again.

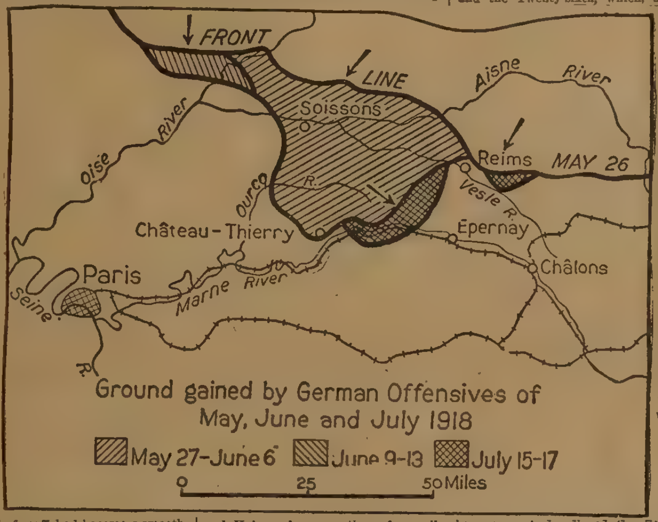
Referring again to my diary:

Chaumont, Wednesday, July 17, 1918.—Another German attack broke Monday. Our Forty-second, part of the Twenty-eighth and the Third, became engaged. The latter counterattacked and captured 600 prisoners. Advised Foch that the Thirty-second and Twenty-ninth divisions are available at once.

Five other divisions have been placed at his disposal. Situation yesterday more favorable for allies. General Bullard assigned to Third corps and General Wright to Fifth.

The intelligence services of all the allied armies had been exerting every endeavor to discover the enemy's plans, with the result that for some days it appeared almost certain that his next move would be directed toward the southeast, on the right and left of Rheims. On the evening of July 14 a French raiding party from General Gouraud's Fourth army, then holding that part of the line including Rheims, luckily captured prisoners who confirmed this belief and who gave the exact hour fixed for the attack, which they said was to take place the following morning.

Our Third division, still in line south of the Marne, faced the enemy between Jaulgonne and Chateau Thierry, and the Twenty-sixth, which, as we have seen, had relieved the Second, held a sector between Torcy and Vaux. Infantry elements of the Twenty-eighth were south of the Marne, serving with the two French divisions on either side of the Third; the entire Forty-second occupied a support position behind Gouraud's front; the First division was north of Meaux, and the Second and Fourth were in reserve near Chateau Thierry.



Ground gained by German Offensives of May, June and July 1918

Surprise for the Enemy.

The German offensive was launched on the early morning of July 15, as expected, but it was met with a surprise barrage put down by General Gouraud's artillery half an hour before the start. The Germans' attack formations were thrown into confusion and their force seriously weakened to begin with. By evening, thanks to the strong resistance they encountered, the situation in that immediate sector was not unfavorable.

Our Forty-second division became engaged and sustained relatively heavy losses. Its conduct on the first and succeeding days brought high praise from the French army commander. Farther west the enemy crossed the Marne, penetrating in one place as far as five miles. He struck our Third division, which was posted along the river, in a determined attempt to force a crossing between Mezy and Varennes, and the fighting became intense, some units of the Thirtieth and Thirty-eighth regiments holding this front being forced back. The stubbornness of their resistance, however, broke up the attack as a whole, and the Germans retired to the north bank.

Thirty-eighth Distinguishes Itself.

On this occasion a single regiment of the Third division (Col. U. G. McAlexander's Thirty-eighth) wrote one of the most brilliant pages in our military annals. It prevented the crossing at certain points on its front, while on either flank the Germans who had gained a footing pressed forward. Our men, firing in three directions, met the German attack with counterattacks at critical points, and succeeded in throwing two German divisions into complete confusion.

Men from three different enemy divisions were captured by the Third in the fighting of this day. By noon of the sixteenth the attacks against its line came to a halt.

The Germans were stopped to the east of Rheims by Gouraud's Fourth army with but slight gains, while to the southwest they got across the Marne and made some progress toward Epernay. The failure of the attack in Champagne and the relatively slight gains to which the Germans were held to the west of Rheims on the first day materially heartened the allies.

Although there were some ten divisions of the enemy remaining south of the Marne, the very evident conclusion, judging from the results of the following two days and the losses he had suffered, was that he would be unable to continue the offensive.

Now that the allied armies were no longer in jeopardy it seemed opportune to push the formation of our own army near Chateau Thierry for use against the Marne salient in the counteroffensive I had frequently urged. The outlook for the allies had changed materially since the crisis of early June. The enemy had been held in his most recent attacks and his losses were presumably very great.

He was losing the advantage of numbers and his superiority was passing.

IN MEMORY OF LITTLE CARL MILLS, BILLINGSLEY

One of the most beautiful scenes as laid in the life of Christ on earth was the calling of the children to Him. His disciples sought to have them put away and the Christ said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, forbid them not: for of such is the Kinkdom of God."

Late in the afternoon of September 5th, 1931, God gathered unto Himself little Carl Mills, aged 10, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Mills of Billingsley.

He was fatally hurt in an automobile accident, living only a few minutes after reaching the hospital in Clanton. "A human flower untouched by the finger of care."

We never see a child die, but we think of cut flowers. The gardener has need of flowers, but he takes them before they are full blooms. Maybe it is that the Gardener has need of some cut flowers. Bereaved one, maybe it is that He went out and cut the one that you concluded belonged to you. Maybe it is today that your heart aches, you feel that you must grieve, and that you have been wronged. Lift up your face and listen. Your cut flower has gone to the end, that you might cast out selfishness and burn to the gray the ashes of discontent. As you think of your cut flower so white and peaceful and still may that precious little face be the guiding star that will lead you and guide you on to a better life, remembering—

"'Twas an angel visited the green earth,
And carried the flower away."

Jackson Chapel News

Dear Editor:

A little space in your paper if you please.

Everybody is very busy in this section of the county gathering their crops. Health is very good at present.

Mrs. R. R. Thompson and children, Marshall and Gladys, of Jackson, Miss., have returned home after an extended visit with relatives and friends in Alabama. While she was visiting her sister, Mrs. W. T. Robinson, of Randolph Route 1, they motored to South Alabama and to parts on the Gulf Coast, spent a week visiting friends and their sister, Mrs. A. W. Harrell, fishing, boating on the Gulf, and report that they had a wonderful time while down there. After their return back to Mrs. Robinson's they spent the week going to protracted meeting of this vicinity, and at Randolph, Ala. Then she went from here to Birmingham to visit her brother, G. W. Honeycutt.

The singing here at Union Springs church Sunday was a grand success. Everybody seemed to enjoy themselves. We were sure glad to have the singing classes from Mars Hill, Center Hill, Oak Grove and Providence churches. These classes sure did some good singing. The directors for the morning were Messrs. C. W. Scott, Lloyd Edwards, Claude Scott, Leo Cobb, Russell Scott and Green Cofer. Organists were Mrs. Howard Roper, Miss Ruby Smith, Miss Jewel Cofer and Mrs. B. L. Cobb. Then we adjourned for dinner, which was a bountiful one and with plenty for everybody. There was plenty to have fed another such crowd. We sure do thank the ladies for their good help in preparing such a wonderful dinner for us, also want to thank the visiting ones for their hearty support in the singing and feed. Then we met back at one-thirty for the afternoon. The leaders were Messrs. C. W. Scott, Ellis Martin, W. J. Northcutt of Jemison, Rossie Scott. Organists were Mrs. Howard Roper, Miss Ruby Smith The closing song was led by Mr. C. W. Scott. We were dismissed by W. J. Northcutt.

Owing to a get-together meeting of the members of Shady Grove church next Sunday we will not have any preaching service Sunday at eleven o'clock, but will have service in the afternoon at three, also night service. We will have Sunday school at 2:00 P. M. Everybody is invited to come and worship with us.

MORAL ECHOES

D. W. Haskew

I was in a grocery store and on a shelf I saw a can that carried this label, "Devil's Lye." This is a concotion of high powered chemicals that carry the power to kill should it be taken into human vitals. When it is first taken it burns like fire and then it sets up an eating process that will soon produce death. The last moments of life where Devil's Lye is getting in its deadly work, are horrible beyond measure. The government forces the producers of Devil's Lye to label it as poisonous and dangerous. This is done because it is dangerous to the physical. The devil has another concoction that he puts out, and this goes without the label indicating danger. The devil puts this concoction in attractive cans and he sweetens the taste so that it becomes very attractive to human hearts. Not one person in Clanton, but many have been drinking down the Devil's Lye. The concoction of iniquity has set up its eating process in the soul, and the end is not yet. I want to warn you that the Devil's Lye is dangerous for body and soul.

I preached at Clanton Sunday morning at 11 A. M. and that afternoon I preached at Isabella at three o'clock. I am telling you an honest fact, I had more people to hear me at Isabella at three o'clock than I had in Clanton at 11 A. M. I am leaving you to be the judge as to which church and which hour should have presented the larger crowd. There are a few in Clanton—in all churches—who are dependable on the question of church going, but the vast majority have about as much use for a church on Sunday as a legless man has for shoes. Why does a legless man care nothing for shoes? It is because he has no place where he can wear them. Why is it that people care nothing for the church? It is because there is no place in their life where the church can serve them. Mark what I say—there is something radically wrong in your life when you are not stirred with a strong passion on every Sunday to worship in God's house. We are talking about a "Financial Depression" but it is time for us to hush on that question, and get down to talking about the "Spiritual Depression" that is on us. If we will remove the spiritual depression by coming up to the help of the Lord, then the Good Spirit will lift the financial depression.

The other day I saw two young ladies walking down the side walk together. They were in close conversation and did not seem to be conscious that they were passing other people along the way. I observed that they were keeping step, and that in their bodily movements they were in perfect harmony. They were the closest friends and their walk and their talk together broght real joy into each heart. It is blessed to walk and talk with those whom you love. I am wondering how many are walking and talking with Jesus Christ. There is no other friend or brother who is closer and dearer than the Christ, and you should make room for him to walk with him. When he comes to join you along this journey of life, give him a once over, and then catch his step. Put yourself into harmony with him and walk and talk to him. There is wonderful fascination in the friendship and the fellowship of the Man of Galilee. If you will make it a rule to walk and talk with Christ, you will stop going to some places where you have been going.

I have just read where two men who defaulted in a trust, to the amount of about four hundred thousand dollars, have been given four years in the pen in Atlanta. We are living in strange days. An honest man can work hard for a small sum per month. A trusted man can work at his place and then steal out the honest savings of those who trust him, and besides being paid a fat salary, he scoops up around fifty thousand dollars per year of the trusted fund. As long as two men can scoop up four hundred thousand dollars, and then draw a sentence of four years, we are going to have stealing, not in banks only, but in every walk of life. In a certain high school where I was last year, the teacher asked each pupil what he expected to do when he was grown. Among the answers given was one that is worthy of note. A handsome boy of seventeen made this reply, "I am going into the banking business, and I am going to steal it out and have plenty." What cares the average boy for the shame of the penitentiary, when money is the thnig that talks, and he can steal out and draw a salary of twenty-five thousnd dollars per year while in the gang? Over in China, when a man defaults in a bank, or trust, he is marched to the wall and shot dead. I would that we could create a consciousness on the value of honesty in American life.

And it came to pass that a certain lady rode up to a public building. She carried the key to the building in her purse, and knowing that no one should be on the inside, she was astonished to see a light in one of the rooms. She slipped to a window and looking in she saw a young fellow on the inside snooping around. He knew that cakes and cream were on the inside, and he had slipped in at a window to see what he could see and find what he could find. Take it from me, when you see a fellow snooping around your home, around in your town, you can be sure that he is not after any good. Go after the "Snooper!" He is dangerous.

Fifty Lose State Posts At Once

Approximately 50 employes of the State Highway Department will be dropped from the rolls within the next 30 days, it was learned Saturday. Some will terminate their services for the State on October 1, others on October 15. All have been notified.

A majority of the employes whose services are to be dispensed with are engineers, inspectors, and rodmen. One laboratory worker is included.

The reduction in personnel is necessary, it is understood, since the road building program financed by Alabama's share of the emergency highway construction appropriation, provided by Congress, has been completed, and in view of the fact that there are no further State road construction funds available at the present time for continuation of development of the State's highway system.

Layoffs already ordered will wind up the trimming of the Highway Department's forces for the time being.

THE NEW FABRICS

The finely woven woolen fabrics that made their appearance at early Paris showings of advance Fall fashions, are now lunched upon a definite career. They have been chosen by many of the leading couturiers as the most important material for the daytime street dress and suit. Black and brown are the popular monotones.

The new woolens also come in a variety of patterned fabrics. There are lined checks of white on a solid color, shaded, large block checks, large plaids stripes and a flecked effect material.

Velvet is generally conceded the best all-round fabric for fall. It is being used profusedly in dresses, coats, suits, and seems to be the favorite material for hats among most of the Paris milliners.

Jersey is a good fabric for Fall wear. It is being woven in a number of contrasting colors in stripes, novelty knots, and flecked effects. In some cases the monotone patterns, usually black or brown, are being used for daytime coats.

Silks are seen in all the displays of fall dresses. They have taken on a woolen aspect due to their heavy, ribbed construction of soft quality material.

70th Anniversay Of Transcontinental Tel.

Observance throughout the United States October 24th of the 70th anniversary of the first transcontinental telegraph service, which linked the isolated Golden West of frontier days with the East, will recall vividly the thrilling periods of American history typified by the Covered Wagon, the Pony Express and the Transcontinental Telegraph.

Covered Wagon days have received nationwide attention since April 10, 1930, on which date was celebrated the 100th anniversary of the departure of the first covered wagon party for the Rocky Mountains and beyond. Remnants of the fast-vanishing history of that period have been compiled, markers placed to preserve historic spots on the Oregon Trail and Pony Express routes, and celebrations held by the Oregon Trail Memorial Association.

The Association this year is marking stations of the Pony Express. It is also cooperating with Western Union, which established the transcontinental telegraph, in observing that event which as much as any other, brought an end to the reckless adventure and Indian fighting of the Golden West and the isolation of great plain, mountain and forest regions then out of touch with civilization.

Civic organizations and schools thruout the nation are invited to observe this anniversary during the week ending October 24th. Many schools will present costume plays based on historic episodes, also classroom or auditorium programs, the material for which will be sent in answer to requests mailed to Western Union Telegraph Company, 60 Hudson Street, New York City.

ARE YOU A PROUD PERSON?

By Dr. Christmas Seal

"Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?" asked William Knox generations ago. The Alabama Tuberculosis Association knows only one good "Why" and that is the pride of being fit for one's job in life.

To be more fit, it is necessary to know how sound your health is and how it can be preserved and improved. This knowledge can be gained from a Health Examination. Go to your family physician for your Health examination.

Many people, though not sick, may not be enjoying the fullness of health and vigor. Some diseases in their early stages give you no warning of their existence. A disease discovered early is the more likely to be cured quickly.

The Alabama Tuberculosis Association recommends that you go to your family physician for your examination because he knows you and your family, he is interested in your physical welfare, he has your confidence, he knows your mental and physical "peculiarities," he can "follow you up" from year to year, and last, because he lives along with you. Take our advice and "Go to your Doctor before he has to come to you."

Business concerns of the home city advertise because they believe in themselves and in their merchandise and want others to do the same

The community booster spirit of the business men of the home city has not only done the most to build up the city, but does the most to keep it growing.

All business men owe an obligation to the city that supports them. Most of them realize this fact; a few don't.

Most business men boost the home city and are intensely loyal to it.

They have prospered with it as it has prospered.

They have given unstinted service to the home city and put back in it such profits as they have made.

Most local business men realize that they are in the public service and are always ready to do more than their share in its development.

Local citizens should support local business men to the limit.

Isabella School News

The student body of the Isabella high school seems to be very much enthused over the student government. The Senior High division of the student government met and organized at the opening of the 1931-32 session. The officers elected were as follows: Marvin Durbin, president; Luther Mims, vice-president; Bazolean Williams, secretary and treasurer, and Morris Keen, reporter.

This is the first attempt to have student government at Isabella. It looks as if they are going to make a success with it. The Senior department assemble every Monday. They have given two splendid programs. Mr. Griffin and Mr. G. G. Williams have made some splendid talks to the students. Everyone realizes that the student government is one more step toward a larger and better school. It trains the morals of every student and reminds him of his responsibility, and makes him more loyal to his school. If students are kept under hard-boiled teachers and their ruler, they soon despise their work and their teacher. The desire to leave soon overcomes them and outside things attract their attention. The student loses interest and says, "I just can't learn, I'm going to quit school," and that's the end of their school career. While if they have something like self government, where everyone has a chance to make or redeem the rules wants or doesn't want school will be much more interesting to them. We hope Isabella will make a success. The students are making a pretty good out at it anyway. Everything is running smoothly so far and expected to continue in this manner.

The Seniors of Isabella for 1931-32 met September the seventh and organized the class. The officers were elected as follows: President, Marvin Durbin: Vice-President, Luther Mims; Secretary and Treasurer; Bazalene Williams; Reporter, Morris Keen.

The Seniors have entered into their work with much enthusiasm and determination to make this the best year ever.

There are ten Seniors enrolled this year. There isn't so many of us but we have the right school spirit and class loyalty.

Much excitement was created last week when the ring man came. The class assembled in the office to select the ring. After much discussion and debating the ring was decided upon. The rings are very beautiful and anyone would consider it an honor to wear one, not for its beauty, but for the place from which it came.

The Seniors are Marvin Durbin, Luther Mims, Morris Keen, Tommy Rucker, Hannon Owen, James Deason, Ruth Oden, Mildred Durbin, Gertie Mae Owen, and Bazolene Williams.

Chilton Man Is Shot In Raid On Coosa Still

Mims, of the Providence Community, Chilton County, were in the vicinity of the still at the time. One man is said to have escaped from the scene.

Statements Conflict

The information given the representative of the News Tuesday stated that Calloway gave the officers quite a scrap before they were able to subdue him and bring him in. The report stated that Calloway grappled with two of the officers several times and fought them sometime after they had caught him.

A representative of the News was allowed to see Calloway, who is confined in the Central Alabama Hospital in Clanton, and secured a statement from him, which he says is a fact and was willing to sign the statement, which is as follows:

"About nine o'clock Monday night, I went from my camp on the Chilton side in my boat to the Coosa side at Hatchett Creek. I got out and walked about forty yards and discovered some barrels, and stopped, and about the time I stopped, they began hollering, 'Halt.'

"I realized I had no business there and made a break to get back to my boat. A gun fired, I was shot in the back, and I fell. When I rose, he—(a stranger to me) a Federal man, hit me over the head with breech of a shot gun, and knocked me down. I rose again and he grabbed me and I outmanned him and reached my boat. Then he hit my left shoulder and knocked me down again in the water. Then the Federal officer and Sheriff Gillespie and Louis Gillespie handcuffed me, and put me in a boat, bringing me to the Chilton side. We then drove in a car from there to the hospital.

"I kept asking who shot me and why they shot me. Walter Gillespie said he didn't shoot me. I kept trying to get them to tell me who shot me while we were on the way to town. I asked the Federal officer, didn't he shoot me and he said, 'No.' I asked him his name and he refused to tell me, until we reached the hospital, then he told me. I asked him again in the hospital, "Ain't you the man who shot me?" and he said, 'No.' After I kept asking him about it, he finally told me he did shoot me."

Information received Tuesday afternoon stated that a warrant had been sworn out for Fridge, the Federal officer, in Coosa County, in connection with the raid and shooting. Calloway stated late Tuesday afternoon that he was not armed at the time of the shooting. Mims was being held in jail in Montgomery Tuesday.

Calloway's condition was not considered very serious Tuesday afternoon, although the full charge of the load went into his back about the belt line and was confined to a space that could be covered by the hand, hospital authorities stated. There is also a deep cut on his head, apparently inflicted by the stock of a gun, it was stated, and Calloway has been complaining of a terrible pain in his shoulder, where he said the officer struck him with the gun.

Among arrests reported by the Sheriff's office in this county during the past few days include one for driving a car while intoxicated and violating the prohibition law, one for public drunkenness, one for non-support and one for petty larceny.

the chairman, Prof. W. M. Devaughn, and was opened with prayer by Judge J. F. Posey of Autauga County. At the beginning of the singing only two members of the executive committe were present—A. H. Henson, Marion Easterling, F. W. Tarrant and Lee J. Grant. The lessons sung in the afternoon by Prof. Henson and Mr. Tarrant were especially enjoyed by the audience.

The first thing after noon, a short business session was held, and the election of officers was entered into. The election resulted as follows: President, W. G. Culp; Vice-President, O. L. Devaughn; Secretary, T. E. Wyatt. It was decided that the executive committee be selected some time later.

After a few announcements, the benediction was invoked by Judge Posey, and the book owners gathered up the fragments of their books that were not taken away, and everyone departed for their homes rejoicing over a day well spent at Verbena in singing praises to Almighty God.—T. E. Wyatt, Sec'y.

FRED HOWARD RETURNS TO THORSBY FROM FISHING TRIP

Tuesday, the News office received a pleasant call from Fred Howard, of Thorsby. Mr. Howard has been down on Bon Secours Bay for two weeks where he says he has certainly been doing some real fishing. Judging from the way he treated one of his thumbs with a fish hook, shows that the fish must have been biting nicely, he being anxious to catch one every time he threw his hook in the water, which he says is about true.

Another thing Mr. Howard is good at is the raising of fine fruit. He don't need any pictures to prove that because it can readily be seen at his large orchard in Thorsby.

State Garners Best Oat Crop In Years

experiments at Auburn the yield of Fall-sown oats was double that of Spring-sown oats over a period of 20 years.

"Drill oats in cotton middles soon after the cotton has been picked. Plant early—even if the oats have to be planted in the middle of a Summer-growing crop before it is harvested—is of much greater importance in securing a good yield than delaying planting to plow the land and prepare it thoroughly.

"Oats should be seeded at the rate of two to three bushels to the acre. Sow red rustproof, Appler, or Fulghum varieties. The Fulghum is earlier than the rustproof.

"North of Birmingham where oats are sometimes lost from freezes the Norton oat is promising, having stood eight degrees above zero in January, 1928, when other varieties were almost completely killed. In three years' tests it made about as large yield as other varieties. The Winter Turf oat is popular with many farmers in the Tennessee Valley.

"It pays to treat oats for smut. Every farmer can secure a cheap and practical formula for treating oats for smut from his county agent."

Reduce the Acid

SICK stomachs, sour stomachs and indigestion usually mean excess acid. The stomach nerves are over-stimulated. Too much acid makes the stomach and intestines sour.

Alkali kills acid instantly. The best form is Phillips Milk of Magnesia; one harmless, tasteless dose neutralizes many times its volume in acid. For 50 years the standard with physicians everywhere.

Take a spoonful in water and your unhappy condition will probably end in five minutes. Then you will always know what to do. Crude and harmful methods will never appeal to you. Go prove this for your own sake. It may save a great many disagreeable hours. Get the genuine Phillips Milk of Magnesia, the kind physicians have prescribed for 50 years.

M.

We further request that Mr. S. R. Butler, chairman of the State Tax Commission, be invited to attend said mass meeting, and explain to the people of Chilton County the reason why the Tax Commission assessed the Alabama Power Company property in this county at 45 per cent. of its value, instead of 60 per cent. as required by law. In the event Mr. Butler can not come in person, we ask that he send a representative who can properly explain this matter.

We urge the tax payers of Chilton County to attend this meeting. We want the people of the county to have a full explanation of this matter, as well as all questions pertaining to taxes.

We hereby order a copy of this call printed in the newspaper of Chilton County, and a copy sent to Hon. S. R. Butler, Chairman of the State Tax Commission.

Adopted this, the 28th, day of September, 1931.

L. H. REYNOLDS, Judge of Probate,
J. E. COBB, J. M. MIMS,

Governor Miller Proclaims Fire Prevention Week October 4-10, 1931

o-o-o-o

Montgomery, Ala.—State Fire Mar- al R. C. Searcy has issued a state- ide appeal to all citizens of Alabama join in a full and active observance the annual fire prevention week, hich is set by proclamation of the esident and of Governor Miller for tober 4 to 10, inclusive.

Governor Miller's proclamation calls on all citizens to lend their support this good movement and he brings t some very striking things on fire ses in his utterances. He appeals to builders and architects to be sure better building plans, to judges, mayors, solicitors, sheriffs, chiefs of police and fire departments, to educators and preachers, and all private citizens to lend their cooperative assistance in this undertaking.

Chief Searcy, of the Fire Marshal Department of the State, has been a most active and effective official since becoming head of this important part of the state government and since his incumbency he has seen numerous firebugs going to the state penitentiaries upon convictions and pleas of guilty for setting property on fire. In discussing the subject, he said:

"During 1930, the last figures available, we burned up in the United States a half billion dollars worth of property and sacrificed ten thousand lives to fires of one kind or another. During the first quarter of 1931, the largest fire loss in the country was at Creskill, N. J., a lumber plant, the loss being a half million. Mobile, Ala., suffered a $400,000.00 warehouse fire during the quarter. One of the deplorable results of a slack business period is incendiary fires, often originating in stores or factories, but at other times in residences, and spreading to adjoining buildings, imperiling the lives and properties of others. Alabama furnishes her share of them. We have rounded up a good many in the state but there are many yet uncaught and unpunished. In the United States last year there were 1,311 arrests on arson charges against 802 in 1929 and 401 convictions in 1930 against 313 in 1929."

Mr. Searcy operates with a staff of four deputies, which he says is not at all adequate to keep up with investigations of suspicious fires for the entire state and he pleads with schools, churches, civic and women's clubs and all law enforcing agencies and fire prevention organizations to lend aid this year in a general and effective prevention campaign.

o

In accordance with a time honored custom which has prevailed in the United States since October 9, 1871, a week is annually set aside as Fire Prevention Week, always to embrace the date of October 9. This is observed throughout the nation and it is set apart with the idea of stimulating the interest and cooperation of public officials and private citizens in diminishing the losses of life and property from the ravages of fire.

According to reliable reports and estimates a half billion dollars worth of property was destroyed in the United States by fire last year and Alabama furnished her proportionate share of this huge sum total of property for destruction. This is forty million dollars more than was burned the preceding year.

We have read and heard much about the cost of crime and the depression in business. I call it to the attention of the citizens of Alabama that the more than five million dollars of loss from fires, a large part of which, the State Fire Marshal tells me, was from the crime of arson, was still more largely due to carelessness and ineffective building plans and operations. Fire is an enemy of business when permitted to start by carelessness or is originated by fraudulent or criminal design. Deaths in the United States from fire last year reached above ten thousand and injuries from accidents incidental to fires were more than twenty-five thousand.

The purpose of National Fire Prevention Week is to focus attention on the hazards of fire and to promote preventive measures to reduce this terrible waste and loss of human life.

Now, Therefore, I. B. M. Miller, Governor of the State of Alabama, do hereby proclaim the week of October 4 to 10, 1931, both inclusive, as Fire Prevention Week and earnestly call upon all architects and builders, educators and teachers, preachers and laymen, mayors, fire and police chiefs, sheriffs, judges, solicitors and any other official or private citizen not herein mentioned to cooperate in every possible way with the Fire Marshal and all forces and agencies in this effort to lessen this loss and needless waste and suffering from fires which are so largely preventable.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the State to be affixed.

Done at Montgomery, Ala., Sept. 12, 1931.

B. M. MILLER,
Governor.

P. B. JARMAN, Jr.,
Secretary of State.

FARADAY CENTENNIAL

o

This month a 10-day celebration is being held in England in honor of the 100th anniversary of Faraday's discovery of magneto-electric induction, which was the origin of the dynamo for the mechanical generation of electricity.

Michael Faraday was born in 1791, the son of an English blacksmith. When he was 10 years old he became a bookbinder's apprentice and read as well as bound many scientific books which passed through his hands.

He later attracted the attention of Sir Humphrey Davy and became his assistant in the laboratory of the Royal Institution. In 1822 Farady wrote his notebook: "Convert magnetism into electricity." But it was not until nine years later that he succeeded in doing it—but when he did he laid the foundation for the vast electrical industry of today.

To the pioneer work of Faraday our own great Edison added his genius to remake the world in which we live. While many great scientists, like Davy, Volta, Watt, Ohm, Ampere and others, have contributed much to making electricity the servant of mankind, it is perhaps safe to say that Faraday and Edison will forever remain the greatest names in the history of electrical development.

HOLDING OUR END UP

If the average citizen who is barely making ends meet, or who is falling behind financially, would check himself up he might find some interesting facts concerning his affairs.

He would probably find, among other things, that his difficulties arise principally from his indulgence in the ancient game of trying to outshine his neighbors.

Take our automobile problem for example. First our neighbor buys an inexpensive car, and we must do likewise—on the installment plan. Then before it is paid for another friend invests in a six-cylinder machine, so in order to keep up appearances we must take another plunge, probably going him a little better.

It is the same with other things. We must have a better radio set than the family next door; better furniture; more stylish clothes. We must send our Mary to an expensive boarding school because Mrs. Jones is sending her Sally—when both would be as well or better off in the home town high school. Then we must give expensive parties for which the Smith or Browns have set the pace. We must have extensive vacation trips, when we might see as fine a collection of billboards right at home. And we wonder why we seem to get hopelessly behind financially.

It is safe to say that at least one-third of the average family's income is spent for such gratification of vanity, beyond what would be necessary to live decently and comfortably.

And by reasonable economy a lot of people who can not or do not pay their honest debts might be able to do so, and thereby enjoy a satisfaction equal to that of "keeping up with the Joneses."
